PRAYER.

Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful God, our Heavenly Father, we adore Thee as the only true and living God, the creator, the preserver, and the supreme ruler of the universe. We thank Thee, O God, for all thy providential blessings to us. They are more in number than the stars of heaven and the sands of the sea-shore. Especially do we thank Thee for Thy kind preservation of us since last we met together in this Chamber, and that we are permitted to enter upon the duties and responsibilities of another session of this venerable body, under circumstances of great mercy, in the enjoyment of reason, and of health and every needed blessing.

It hath seemed good unto Thee, O God, in Thine inscrutable providence, to remove by the hand of death from this body one of its members. We pray that Thou wouldst bless his afflicted family. Sustain them in their sore bereavement and comfort them with the consolations of our most holy religion. And may we be deeply impressed, by this solemn event, of our own mortality, of the shortness and uncertainty of life, and of the importance of being prepared for our departure; for we know neither the day nor the hour when we shall be called hence.

And, O God, we invoke Thy blessing to rest upon another member of this body, whom Thou hast sorely stricken, in removing by death from his companionship the partner of his joys and his sorrows. We invoke Thy blessing to rest upon him in his sore affliction. And if there be any other members upon whom Thou hast laid Thy afflicting hand, we pray that Thou wouldst remember them in great mercy and sanctify their afflictions to them.

We commit ourselves and all that are dear to us to Thy guidance and protection. We implore Thy grace, and the forgiveness of all our sins. We pray for our rulers, for the President and the Vice-President, the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and for all others in authority. Guide their councils and lead them to the adoption of such measures as shall redound to Thy glory and to the best interests of our common country. Be Thou their guide and support through all the trials and changes of life; be with them in the solemn hour of death; and finally receive us all into Thine everlasting kingdom, through the riches of grace in Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. THURMAN offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. BAYARD and ANTHONY were appointed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. WALLACE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate be twelve o'clock meridian, until otherwise ordered.

REPORT OF SECRETARY OF SENATE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Senate from March 25, 1879, to June 30, 1879, and a statement of property in his possession belonging to the United States December 1, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORT OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the annual report of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of property in his possession belonging to the United States December 1, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire that the communications connected with the Senate expenditures may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, when appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communications will lie on the table for the present, to be referred to that committee when appointed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the clerk of the Court of Claims, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of the judgments rendered by that court during the year ending November 29, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. THURMAN, (at twelve o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate take a recess for three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would suggest to the Senator from Ohio to name half an hour. It is likely that the Senate may be able to proceed with business by that time.

Mr. THURMAN. My experience is that when we have taken a recess for half an hour under circumstances like the present we have had to extend the time. I think we may as well take a recess for three-quarters of an hour at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I do not insist on my suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate take a recess for three-quarters of an hour.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at one o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared at the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is now ready to proceed to business. I am also directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives has appointed Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS, of Tennessee; Mr. GEORGE A. BICKNELL, of Indiana, and Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD, of Ohio, a committee on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

DARIEN CANAL—MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that tomorrow, immediately after the morning hour, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate whilst I address a few remarks upon a resolution which I introduced last June touching the interoceanic canal, and reaffirming the Monroe doctrine. I promise not to detain the Senate to exceed half an hour.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States, in conjunction with a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives, and to inform him that a quorum of both Houses was present and ready to receive any communication from him, have performed the duty assigned them, and have been informed by the President that he would communicate his message in writing at once.

At one o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m., Mr. W. K. RODGERS, the Private Secretary of the President of the United States, appeared at the bar of the Senate, and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the Secretary, and handed to the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate, Mr. JOHN C. BURCH, read the message, as follows:

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The members of the Forty-sixth Congress have assembled in their first regular session under circumstances calling for mutual congratulation and grateful acknowledgment to the Giver of all good for the large and unusual measure of national prosperity which we now enjoy.

The most interesting events which have occurred in our public affairs since my last annual message to Congress are connected with the financial operations of the Government directly affecting the business interests of the country.

I congratulate Congress on the successful execution of the resumption act. At the time fixed, and in the manner contemplated by law, United States notes began to be redeemed in coin. Since the 1st of January last they have been promptly redeemed on presentation, and in all business transactions, public and private, in all parts of the country, they are received and paid out as the equivalent of coin. The demand upon the Treasury for gold and silver in exchange for United States notes has been comparatively small, and the voluntary deposit of coin and bullion in exchange for notes has been very large. The excess of the precious metals deposited or exchanged for United States notes over the amount of United States notes redeemed is about $40,000,000.

The resumption of specie payments has been followed by a very great revival of business. With a currency equivalent in value to the money of the commercial world, we are enabled to enter upon an equal competition with other nations in trade and production. The increasing foreign demand for our manufactures and agricultural products has caused a large balance of trade in our favor, which has been paid in gold, from the 1st of July last to November 15, to the amount of about $59,000,000. Since the resumption of specie payments there has also been a marked and gratifying improvement of the public credit. The bonds of the Government bearing only 4 per cent. interest have been sold at or above par, sufficient in amount to pay off all of the national debt which was redeemable under present laws. The amount of interest saved annually by the process of refunding the debt, since March 1, 1877, is $14,297,177. The bonds sold were largely in small sums, and the number of our citizens now holding the public securities is much greater than ever before. The amount of the national debt which matures within less than two years is $792,121,700, of which $500,000,000 bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent., and the balance is in bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest. It is believed that this part of the public debt can be refunded by the issue of 4 per cent. bonds, and, by the reduction of interest which will thus be effected, about eleven millions of dollars can be annually saved to the Treasury. To secure this important reduction of interest to be paid by the United States, further legislation is required, which, it is hoped, will be provided by Congress during its present session.

The coinage of gold by the mints of the United States during the last fiscal year was $40,986,912. The coinage of silver dollars since the passage of the act for that purpose up to November 1, 1879, was $45,000,850, of which $12,700,344 have been issued from the Treasury, and are now in circulation, and $32,300,506 are still in the possession of the Government.

The pendency of the proposition for unity of action between the United States and the principal commercial nations of Europe to effect a permanent system for the equality of gold and silver in the recognized money of the world leads me to recommend that Congress refrain from new legislation on the general subject. The great revival of trade, internal and foreign, will supply during the coming year its own instructions, which may well be awaited before attempting further experimental measures with the coinage. I would, however, strongly urge upon Congress the importance of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend the coinage of silver dollars upon the present legal ratio. The market value of the silver dollar being uniformly and largely less than the market value of the gold dollar, it is obviously impracticable to maintain them at par with each other if both are coined without limit. If the cheaper coin is forced into circulation it will, if coined without limit, soon become the sole standard of value, and thus defeat the desired object, which is a currency of both gold and silver, which shall be of equivalent value, dollar for dollar, with the universally recognized money of the world.

The retirement from circulation of United States notes, with the capacity of legal tender in private contracts, is a step to be taken in our progress toward a safe and stable currency, which should be accepted as the policy and duty of the Government, and the interest and security of the people. It is my firm conviction that the issue of legal tender paper money based wholly upon the authority and credit of the Government, except in extreme emergency, is without warrant in the Constitution, and a violation of sound financial principles. The issue of United States notes during the late civil war with the capacity of legal tender between private individuals was not authorized except as a means of rescuing the country from imminent peril. The circulation of these notes as paper money for any protracted period of time after the accomplishment of this purpose was not contemplated by the framers of the law under which they were issued. They anticipated the redemption and withdrawal of these notes at the earliest practicable period consistent with the attainment of the object for which they were provided.

The policy of the United States, steadily adhered to from the adoption of the Constitution, has been to avoid the creation of a national debt, and when, from necessity in time of war, debts have been created, they have been paid off on the return of peace as rapidly as possible. With this view and for this purpose, it is recommended that the existing laws for the accumulation of a sinking fund sufficient to extinguish the public debt within a limited period be maintained. If any change of the objects or rates of taxation is deemed necessary by Congress, it is suggested that experience has shown that a duty can be placed on tea and coffee, which will not enhance the price of those articles to the consumer, and which will add several millions of dollars annually to the Treasury.

The continued deliberate violation by a large number of the prominent and influential citizens of the Territory of Utah of the laws of the United States for the prosecution and punishment of polygamy demands the attention of every department of the Government. This Territory has a population sufficient to entitle it to admission as a State, and the general interests of the nation, as well as the welfare of the citizens of the Territory, require its advance from the territorial form of government to the responsibilities and privileges of a State. This important change will not, however, be approved by the country while the citizens of Utah in very considerable number uphold a practice which is condemned as a crime by the laws of all civilized communities throughout the world.

The law for the suppression of this offense was enacted with great unanimity by Congress more than seventeen years ago, but has remained until recently a dead letter in the Territory of Utah because of the peculiar difficulties attending its enforcement. The opinion widely prevailed among the citizens of Utah that the law was in contravention of the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom. This objection is now removed. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided the law to be within the legislative power of Congress, and binding as a rule of action for all who reside within the Territories. There is no longer any reason for delay or hesitation in its enforcement. It should be firmly and effectively executed. If not sufficiently stringent in its provisions it should be amended; and, in aid of the purpose in view, I recommend that more comprehensive and more searching methods for preventing as well as punishing this crime be provided. If necessary to secure obedience to the law, the enjoyment and exercise of the rights and privileges of citizenship in the Territories of the United States may be withheld or withdrawn from those who violate or oppose the enforcement of the law on this subject.

The elections of the past year, though occupied only with State offices, have not failed to elicit in the political discussions which attended them all over the country new and decisive evidence of the deep interest which the great body of citizens take in the progress of the country toward a more general and complete establishment, at whatever cost, of universal security and freedom in the exercise of the elective franchise. While many topics of political concern demand great attention from our people, both in the sphere of national and State authority, I find no reason to qualify the opinion I expressed in my last annual message, that no temporary or administrative interests of government, however urgent or weighty, will ever displace the zeal of our people in defense of the primary rights of citizenship, and that the power of public opinion will override all political prejudices, and all sectional and State attachments, in demanding that all over our wide territory the name and character of citizen of the United States shall mean one and the same thing, and carry with them unchallenged security and respect. I earnestly appeal to the intelligence and patriotism of all good citizens of every part of the country, however much they may be divided in opinions on other political subjects, to unite in compelling obedience to existing laws aimed at the protection of the right of suffrage. I respectfully urge upon Congress to supply any defects in these laws which experience has shown and which it is within its power to remedy. I again invoke the co-operation of the executive and legislative authorities of the States in this great purpose. I am fully convinced that, if the public mind can be set at rest on this paramount question of popular rights, no serious obstacle will thwart or delay the complete pacification of the country, or retard the general diffusion of prosperity.

In a former message I invited the attention of Congress to the subject of the reformation of the civil service of the Government, and expressed the intention of transmitting to Congress as early as practicable a report upon this subject by the chairman of the civil service commission.

In view of the facts that during a considerable period the government of Great Britain has been dealing with administrative problems and abuses in various particulars analogous to those presented in this country, and that in recent years the measures adopted were understood to have been effective, and in every respect highly satisfactory, I thought it desirable to have fuller information upon the subject, and accordingly requested the chairman of the civil service commission to make a thorough investigation for this purpose. The result has been an elaborate and comprehensive report.

The report sets forth the history of the partisan-spoils system in Great Britain, and of the rise and fall of the parliamentary patronage, and of official interference with the freedom of elections. It shows that after long trials of various kinds of examinations, those which are competitive and open on equal terms to all, and which are carried on under the superintendence of a single commission, have, with great advantage, been established as conditions of admission to almost every official place in the subordinate administration of that country and of British India. The completion of the report, owing to the extent of the labor involved in its preparation, and the omission of Congress to make any provision either for the compensation or the expenses of the commission, has been postponed until the present time. It is herewith transmitted to Congress.

While the reform measures of another government are of no authority for us, they are entitled to influence to the extent to which their intrinsic wisdom and their adaptation to our institutions and social life may commend them to our consideration.

The views I have heretofore expressed concerning the defects and abuses in our civil administration remain unchanged, except in so far as an enlarged experience has deepened my sense of the duty both of officers and of the people themselves to co-operate for their removal. The grave evils and perils of a partisan-spoils system of appointment to office and of office tenure are now generally recognized. In the resolutions of the great parties, in the reports of Departments, in the debates and proceedings of Congress, in the messages of Executives, the gravity of these evils has been pointed out and the need of their reform has been admitted.

To command the necessary support, every measure of reform must be based on common right and justice, and must be compatible with the healthy existence of great parties, which are inevitable and essential in a free state.

When the people have approved a policy at a national election, confidence on the part of the officers they have selected, and of the advisers who, in accordance with our political institutions, should be consulted in the policy which it is their duty to carry into effect, is indispensable. It is eminently proper that they should explain it before the people, as well as illustrate its spirit in the performance of their official duties.

Very different considerations apply to the greater number of those who fill the subordinate places in the civil service. Their responsibility is to their superiors in official position. It is their duty to obey the legal instructions of those upon whom that authority is devolved, and their best public service consists in the discharge of their functions irrespective of partisan politics. Their duties are the same, whatever party is in power and whatever policy prevails. As a consequence, it follows that their tenure of office should not depend on the prevalence of any policy or the supremacy of any party, but should be determined by their capacity to serve the people most usefully, quite irrespective of partisan interests. The same considerations that should govern the tenure should also prevail in the appointment, discipline, and removal of these subordinates. The authority of appointment and removal is not a perquisite, which may be used to aid a friend or reward a partisan, but is a trust to be exercised in the public interest, under all the sanctions which attend the obligation to apply the public funds only for public purposes.

Every citizen has an equal right to the honor and profit of entering the public service of his country. The only just ground of discrimination is the measure of character and capacity he has to make that service most useful to the people. Except in cases where, upon just and recognized principles, as upon the theory of pensions, offices and promotions are bestowed as rewards for past services, their bestowal upon any theory which disregards personal merit is an act of injustice to the citizen, as well as a breach of that trust subject to which the appointing power is held.

In the light of these principles it becomes of great importance to provide just and adequate means, especially for every department and large administrative office, where personal discrimination on the part of its head is not practicable, for ascertaining those qualifications to which appointments and removals should have reference. To fail to provide such means is not only to deny the opportunity of ascertaining the facts upon which the most righteous claim to office depends, but, of necessity, to discourage all worthy aspirants by handing over appointments and removals to mere influence and favoritism. If it is the right of the worthiest claimant to gain the appointment, and the interest of the people to bestow it upon him, it would seem clear that a wise and just method of ascertaining personal fitness for office must be an important and permanent function of every just and wise government. It has long since become impossible, in the great offices, for those having the duty of nomination and appointment to personally examine into the individual qualifications of more than a small proportion of those seeking office; and, with the enlargement of the civil service, that proportion must continue to become less.

In the earlier years of the Government, the subordinate officers were so few in number that it was quite easy for those making appointments and promotions to personally ascertain the merits of candidates—party managers and methods had not then become powerful agencies of coercion, hostile to the free and just exercise of the appointing power.

A large and responsible part of the duty of restoring the civil service to the desired purity and efficiency rests upon the President, and it is my purpose to do what is within my power to advance such prudent and gradual measures of reform as will most surely and rapidly bring about that radical change of system essential to make our administrative methods satisfactory to a free and intelligent people. By a proper exercise of authority, it is in the power of the Executive to do much to promote such a reform. But it cannot be too clearly understood that nothing adequate can be accomplished without co-operation on the part of Congress and considerate and intelligent support among the people. Reforms which challenge the generally accepted theories of parties, and demand changes in the methods of departments, are not the work of a day. Their permanent foundations must be laid in sound principles, and in an experience which demonstrates their wisdom and exposes the errors of their adversaries. Every worthy officer desires to make his official action a gain and an honor to his country, but the people themselves, far more than their officers in public station, are interested in a pure, economical, and vigorous administration.

By laws enacted in 1853 and 1855, and now in substance incorporated in the Revised Statutes, the practice of arbitrary appointments to the several subordinate grades in the great Departments was condemned, and examinations as to capacity, to be conducted by departmental boards of examiners, were provided for and made conditions of admission to the public service. These statutes are a decision by Congress that examinations of some sort as to attainments and capacity are essential to the well-being of the public service. The important questions since the enactment of these laws have been as to the character of these examinations, and whether official favor and partisan influence, or common right and merit, were to control the access to the examinations. In practice, these examinations have not always been open to worthy persons generally who might wish to be examined. Official favoritism and partisan influence, as a rule, appear to have designated those who alone were permitted to go before the examining boards, subjecting even the examiners to a pressure from the friends of the candidates very difficult to resist. As a consequence the standard of admission fell below that which the public interest demanded. It was also almost inevitable that a system which provided for various separate boards of examiners, with no common supervision or uniform method of procedure, should result in confusion, inconsistency, and inadequate tests of capacity highly detrimental to the public interests. A further and more radical change was obviously required.

In the annual message of December, 1870, my predecessor declared that "there is no duty which so much embarrasses the Executive and heads of Departments as that of appointments; nor is there any such arduous and thankless labor imposed on Senators and Representatives as that of finding places for constituents. The present system does not secure the best men, and often not even fit men, for the public places. The elevation and purification of the civil service of the Government will be hailed with approval by the whole people of the United States." Congress accordingly passed the act approved March 3, 1871, "to regulate the civil service of the United States and promote the efficiency thereof," giving the necessary authority to the Executive to inaugurate a civil-service reform.

Acting under this statute, which was interpreted as intended to secure a system of just and effectual examinations under uniform supervision, a number of eminently competent persons were selected for the purpose, who entered with zeal upon the discharge of their duties, prepared, with an intelligent appreciation of the requirements of the service, the regulations contemplated, and took charge of the examinations, and who, in their capacity as a board, have been known as the "civil service commission." Congress for two years appropriated the money needed for the compensation and for the expense of carrying on the work of the commission.

It appears from the report of the commission, submitted to the President in April, 1874, that examinations had been held in various sections of the country, and that an appropriation of about $25,000 would be required to meet the annual expenses, including salaries involved in discharging the duties of the commission. The report was transmitted to Congress by special message of April 18, 1874, with the following favorable comment upon the labors of the commission: 'If sustained by Congress, I have no doubt the rules can, after the experience gained, be so improved and enforced as to still more materially benefit the public service and relieve the Executive, members of Congress, and the heads of Departments from influences prejudicial to good administration. The rules, as they have hitherto been enforced, have resulted beneficially, as is shown by the opinions of the members of the Cabinet and their subordinates in the Departments, and in that opinion I concur." And in the annual message of December of the same year similar views are expressed, and an appropriation for continuing the work of the commission again advised.

The appropriation was not made, and, as a consequence, the active work of the commission was suspended, leaving the commission itself still in existence. Without the means, therefore, of causing qualifications to be tested in any systematic manner, or of securing for the public service the advantages of competition upon any extensive plan, I recommended in my annual message of December, 1877, the making of an appropriation for the resumption of the work of the commission.

In the mean time, however, competitive examinations under many embarrassments have been conducted within limited spheres in the Executive Departments in Washington and in a number of the custom-houses and post-offices of the principal cities of the country with a view to further test their effects, and in every instance they have been found to be as salutary as they are stated to have been under the administration of my predecessor. I think the economy, purity, and efficiency of the public service would be greatly promoted by their systematic introduction wherever practicable throughout the entire civil service of the Government, together with ample provision for their general supervision in order to secure consistency and uniform justice.

Reports from the Secretary of the Interior, from the Postmaster-General, from the postmaster in the city of New York, where such examinations have been some time on trial, and also from the collector of the port, the naval officer, and the surveyor in that city, and from the postmasters and collectors in several of the other large cities, show that the competitive system where applied has in various ways contributed to improve the public service.

The reports show that the results have been salutary in a marked degree, and that the general application of similar rules cannot fail to be of decided benefit to the service.

The reports of the Government officers, in the city of New York especially, bear decided testimony to the utility of open competitive examinations in their respective offices, showing that "these examinations, and the excellent qualifications of those admitted to the service through them, have had a marked incidental effect upon the persons previously in the service, and particularly upon those aspiring to promotion. There has been, on the part of these latter, an increased interest in the work, and a desire to extend acquaintance with it beyond the particular desk occupied, and thus the morale of the entire force has been raised. * * * The examinations have been attended by many citizens who have had an opportunity to thoroughly investigate the scope and character of the tests and the method of determining the results, and those visitors have, without exception, approved the methods employed, and several of them have publicly attested their favorable opinion."

Upon such considerations, I deem it my duty to renew the recommendation contained in my annual message of December, 1877, requesting Congress to make the necessary appropriation for the resumption of the work of the civil-service commission. Economy will be promoted by authorizing a moderate compensation to persons in the public service who may perform extra labor upon or under the commission, as the Executive may direct.

I am convinced that if a just and adequate test of merit is enforced for admission to the public service and in making promotions, such abuses as removals without good cause and partisan and official interference with the proper exercise of the appointing power, will in large measure disappear.

There are other administrative abuses to which the attention of Congress should be asked in this connection. Mere partisan appointments, and the constant peril of removal without cause, very naturally lead to an absorbing and mischievous political activity on the part of those thus appointed, which not only interferes with the due discharge of official duty, but is incompatible with the freedom of elections. Not without warrant in the views of several of my predecessors in the presidential office, and directly within the law of 1871, already cited, I endeavored, by regulation made on the 22d day of June, 1877, to put some reasonable limits to such abuses. It may not be easy, and it may never perhaps be necessary, to define with precision the proper limit of political action on the part of Federal officers. But while their right to hold and freely express their opinions cannot be questioned, it is very plain that they should neither be allowed to devote to other subjects the time needed for the proper discharge of their official duties, nor to use the authority of their office to enforce their own opinions or to coerce the political action of those who hold different opinions.

Reasons of justice and public policy, quite analogous to those which forbid the use of official power for the oppression of the private citizen, impose upon the Government the duty of protecting its officers and agents from arbitrary exactions. In whatever aspect considered, the practice of making levies for party purposes, upon the salaries of officers, is highly demoralizing to the public service and discreditable to the country. Though an officer should be as free as any other citizen to give his own money in aid of his opinions or his party, he should also be as free as any other citizen to refuse to make such gifts. If salaries are but a fair compensation for the time and labor of the officer, it is gross injustice to levy a tax upon them. If they are made excessive in order that they may bear the tax, the excess is an indirect robbery of the public funds.

I recommend, therefore, such a revision and extension of present statutes as shall secure to those in every grade of official life or public employment the protection with which a great and enlightened nation should guard those who are faithful in its service.

Our relations with foreign countries have continued peaceful. With Great Britain there are still unsettled questions, growing out of the local laws of the maritime provinces and the action of provincial authorities, deemed to be in derogation of rights secured by treaty to American fishermen. The United States minister in London has been instructed to present a demand for $105,305.02 in view of the damages received by American citizens at Fortune Bay, on the 6th day of January, 1878. The subject has been taken into consideration by the British government, and an early reply is anticipated.

Upon the completion of the necessary preliminary examinations the subject of our participation in the provincial fisheries as regulated by treaty will at once be brought to the attention of the British government with a view to an early and permanent settlement of the whole question, which was only temporarily adjusted by the treaty of Washington.

Efforts have been made to obtain the removal of restrictions found injurious to the exportation of cattle to the United Kingdom.

Some correspondence has also occurred with regard to the rescue and saving of life and property upon the lakes, which has resulted in important modifications of the previous regulations of the Dominion government on the subject, in the interest of humanity and commerce.

In accordance with the joint resolution of the last session of Congress, commissioners were appointed to represent the United States at the two international exhibitions in Australia, one of which is now in progress at Sidney and the other to be held next year at Melbourne. A desire has been expressed by our merchants and manufacturers interested in the important and growing trade with Australia that an increased provision should be made by Congress for the representation of our industries at the Melbourne exhibition of next year, and the subject is respectfully submitted to your favorable consideration.

The assent of the Government has been given to the landing on the coast of Massachusetts of a new and independent transatlantic cable between France, by way of the French island of St. Pierre, and this country, subject to any future legislation of Congress on the subject. The conditions imposed, before allowing this connection with our shores to be established, are such as to secure its competition with any existing or future lines of marine cable, and preclude amalgamation therewith, to provide for entire equality of rights to our Government and people with those of France in the use of the cable, and prevent any exclusive possession of the privilege as accorded by France to the disadvantage of any future cable communication between France and the United States which may be projected and accomplished by our citizens. An important reduction of the present rates of cable communication with Europe, felt to be too burdensome to the interests of our commerce, must necessarily flow from the establishment of this competing line.

The attention of Congress was drawn to the propriety of some general regulation by Congress of the whole subject of transmarine cables by my predecessor in his message of December 7, 1875, and I respectfully submit to your consideration the importance of congressional action in the matter.

The questions of grave importance with Spain, growing out of the incidents of the Cuban insurrection, have been, for the most part, happily and honorably settled. It may reasonably be anticipated that the commission now sitting in Washington, for the decision of private cases in this connection, will soon be able to bring its labors to a conclusion.

The long standing question of East Florida claims has lately been renewed as a subject of correspondence, and may possibly require congressional action for its final disposition.

A treaty with the Netherlands, with respect to consular rights and privileges, similar to those with other powers, has been signed and ratified, and the ratifications were exchanged on the 31st of July last. Negotiations for extradition treaties with the Netherlands and with Denmark are now in progress.

Some questions with Switzerland, in regard to pauper and convict emigrants, have arisen, but it is not doubted that they will be arranged upon a just and satisfactory basis. A question has also occurred with respect to an asserted claim by Swiss municipal authorities to exercise tutelage over persons and property of Swiss citizens naturalized in this country. It is possible this may require adjustment by treaty.

With the German Empire frequent questions arise in connection with the subjects of naturalization and expatriation; but the imperial government has constantly manifested a desire to strictly maintain and comply with all treaty stipulations in regard to them.

In consequence of the omission of Congress to provide for a diplomatic representative at Athens, the legation to Greece has been withdrawn. There is now no channel of diplomatic communication between the two countries, and the expediency of providing for one, in some form, is submitted to Congress.

Relations with Austria, Russia, Italy, Portugal, Turkey, and Belgium continue amicable, and marked by no incident of especial importance.

A change of the personal head of the government of Egypt has taken place. No change, however, has occurred in the relations between Egypt and the United States. The action of the Egyptian government in presenting to the city of New York one of the ancient obelisks, which possess such historic interest, is highly appreciated as a generous mark of international regard. If prosperity should attend the enterprise of its transportation across the Atlantic, its erection in a conspicuous position in the chief commercial city of the nation will soon be accomplished.

The treaty recently made between Japan and the United States in regard to the revision of former commercial treaties, it is now believed, will be followed by similar action on the part of other treaty powers. The attention of Congress is again invited to the subject of the indemnity funds received some years since from Japan and China, which, with their accumulated interest, now amount to considerable sums. If any part of these funds is justly due to American citizens, they should receive it promptly; and whatever may have been received by this Government in excess of strictly just demands should in some form be returned to the nations to whom it equitably belongs.

The government of China has signified its willingness to consider the question of the emigration of its subjects to the United States with a dispassionate fairness, and to co-operate in such measures as may tend to prevent injurious consequences to the United States. The negotiations are still proceeding, and will be pressed with diligence.

A question having arisen between China and Japan about the Lew Chew Islands, the United States Government has taken measures to inform those powers of its readiness to extend its good offices for the maintenance of peace, if they shall mutually deem it desirable and find it practicable to avail themselves of the proffer.

It is a gratification to be able to announce that, through the judicious and energetic action of the military commanders of the two nations on each side of the Rio Grande, under the instructions of their respective governments, raids and depredations have greatly decreased, and in the localities where formerly most destructive have now almost wholly ceased. In view of this result, I entertain a confident expectation that the prevalence of quiet on the border will soon become so assured as to justify a modification of the present orders to our military commanders as to crossing the border, without encouraging such disturbances as would endanger the peace of the two countries.

The third installment of the award against Mexico under the claims commission of July 4, 1868, was duly paid, and has been put in course of distribution in pursuance of the act of Congress providing for the same. This satisfactory situation between the two countries leads me to anticipate an expansion of our trade with Mexico and an increased contribution of capital and industry by our people to the development of the great resources of that country. I earnestly commend to the wisdom of Congress the provision of suitable legislation looking to this result.

Diplomatic intercourse with Colombia is again fully restored by the arrival of a minister from that country to the United States. This is especially fortunate in view of the fact that the question of an interoceanic canal has recently assumed a new and important aspect, and is now under discussion with the Central American countries through whose territory the canal, by the Nicaragua route, would have to pass. It is trusted that enlightened statesmanship on their part will see that the early prosecution of such a work will largely inure to the benefit, not only to their own citizens and those of the United States, but of the commerce of the civilized world. It is not doubted that should the work be undertaken under the protective auspices of the United States, and upon satisfactory concessions for the right of way and its security by the Central American governments, the capital for its completion would be readily furnished from this country and Europe, which might, failing such guarantees, prove inaccessible.

Diplomatic relations with Chili have also been strengthened by the reception of a minister from that country.

The war between Peru, Bolivia, and Chili still continues. The United States have not deemed it proper to interpose in the matter further than to convey to all the governments concerned the assurance that the friendly offices of the Government of the United States for the restoration of peace upon an honorable basis will be extended, in case the belligerents shall exhibit a readiness to accept them.

Cordial relations continue with Brazil and the Argentine Republic, and trade with those countries is improving. A provision for regular and more frequent mail communication, in our own ships, between the ports of this country and the nations of South America seems to me to deserve the attention of Congress, as an essential precursor of an enlargement of our commerce with them and an extension of our carrying trade.

A recent revolution in Venezuela has been followed by the establishment of a provisional government. This government has not yet been formally recognized, and it is deemed desirable to await the proposed action of the people, which is expected to give it the sanction of constitutional forms.

A naval vessel has been sent to the Samoan Islands to make surveys and take possession of the privileges ceded to the United States by Samoa in the harbor of Pagopago. A coaling station is to be established there, which will be convenient and useful to United States vessels.

The subject of opening diplomatic relations with Roumania and Servia, now become independent sovereignties, is at present under consideration, and is the subject of diplomatic correspondence.

There is a gratifying increase of trade with nearly all European and American countries, and it is believed that with judicious action in regard to its development, it can and will be still more enhanced, and that American products and manufactures will find new and expanding markets. The reports of diplomatic and consular officers upon this subject, under the system now adopted, have resulted in obtaining much valuable information, which has been and will continue to be laid before Congress and the public from time to time.

The third article of the treaty with Russia, of March 30, 1867, by which Alaska was ceded to the United States, provides that the inhabitants of the ceded territory, with the exception of the uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes are subject to such laws and regulations as the United States may from time to time adopt in regard to the aboriginal tribes of that country.

Both the obligations of this treaty and the necessities of the people require that some organized form of government over the Territory of Alaska be adopted.

There appears to be no law for the arrest of persons charged with common-law offenses, such as assault, robbery, and murder, and no magistrate authorized to issue or execute process in such cases. Serious difficulties have already arisen from offenses of this character, not only among the original inhabitants, but among citizens of the United States and other countries, who have engaged in mining, fishing and other business operations within the Territory. A bill authorizing the appointment of justices of the peace and constables, and the arrest and detention of persons charged with criminal offenses, and providing for an appeal to United States courts for the district of Oregon, in suitable cases, will at a proper time be submitted to Congress.

The attention of Congress is called to the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the condition of the public finances.

The ordinary revenues from all sources for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, were $273,827,184.46; the ordinary expenditures for the same period were $266,947,883.53; leaving a surplus revenue for the year of $6,879,300.93.

The receipts for the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, actual and estimated, are as follows: Actual receipts for the first quarter, commencing July 1, 1879, $79,843,663.61; estimated receipts for the remaining three-quarters of the year, $208,156,336.39; total receipts for the current fiscal year, actual and estimated, $288,000,000. The expenditures for the same period will be, actual and estimated, as follows: For the quarter commencing July 1, 1879, actual expenditures, $91,683,385.10, and for the remaining three-quarters of the year the expenditures are estimated at $172,316,614.90; making the total expenditures $264,000,000, and leaving an estimated surplus revenue, for the year ending June 30, 1880, of $24,000,000. The total receipts during the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, estimated according to existing laws, will be $288,000,000, and the estimated ordinary expenditures for the same period will be $278,097,364.39; leaving a surplus of $9,902,635.61 for that year.

The large amount expended for arrears of pensions during the last and the present fiscal year, amounting to $21,747,249.60, has prevented the application of the full amount required by law to the sinking fund for the current year; but these arrears having been substantially paid, it is believed that the sinking fund can hereafter be maintained without any change of existing law.

The Secretary of War reports that the War Department estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, are $40,380,428.93, the same being for a less sum of money than any annual estimate rendered to Congress from that Department during a period of at least twelve years.

He concurs with the General of the Army in recommending such legislation as will authorize the enlistment of the full number of twenty-five thousand men for the line of the Army, exclusive of the thirty-four hundred and sixty-three men required for detached duty, and therefore not available for service in the field.

He also recommends that Congress be asked to provide by law for the disposition of a large number of abandoned military posts and reservations, which, though very valuable in themselves, have been rendered useless for military purposes by the advance of civilization and settlement.

He unites with the Quartermaster-General in recommending that an appropriation be made for the construction of a cheap and perfectly fire-proof building for the safe storage of a vast amount of money-accounts, vouchers, claims, and other valuable records now in the Quartermaster-General's Office, and exposed to great risk of total destruction by fire.

He also recommends, in conformity with the views of the Judge-Advocate General, some declaratory legislation in reference to the military statute of limitations as applied to the crime of desertion.

In these several recommendations I concur.

The Secretary of War further reports that the work for the improvement of the South Pass of the Mississippi River, under contract with Mr. James B. Eads, made in pursuance of an act of Congress, has been prosecuted during the past year with a greater measure of success in the attainment of results than during any previous year. The channel through the South Pass, which, at the beginning of operations in June, 1875, had a depth of only seven and one-half feet of water, had, on the 8th of July, 1879, a minimum depth of twenty-six feet, having a width of not less than two hundred feet and a central depth of thirty feet. Payments have been made in accordance with the statute as the work progressed, amounting in the aggregate to $4,250,000; and further payments will become due as provided by the statute in the event of success in maintaining the channel now secured.

The reports of the General of the Army and of his subordinates present a full and detailed account of the military operations for the suppression of hostilities among the Indians of the Ute and Apache tribes, and praise is justly awarded to the officers and troops engaged for promptness, skill, and courage displayed.

The past year has been one of almost unbroken peace and quiet on the Mexican frontier, and there is reason to believe that the efforts of this Government and of Mexico to maintain order in that region will prove permanently successful.

This Department was enabled during the past year to find temporary though crowded accommodations, and a safe depository for a portion of its records, in the completed east wing of the building designed for the State, War, and Navy Departments. The construction of the north wing of the building, a part of the structure intended for the use of the War Department, is being carried forward with all possible dispatch, and the work should receive from Congress such liberal appropriations as will secure its speedy completion.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows continued improvement in that branch of the service during the fiscal year. Extensive repairs have been made upon vessels, and two new ships have been completed and made ready for sea.

The total expenditures of the year ended June 30, 1879, including specific appropriations not estimated for by the Department, were $13,555,710.09. The expenses chargeable to the year, after deducting the amount of these specific appropriations, were $13,343,317.79; but this is subject to a reduction of $283,725.99, that amount having been drawn upon warrants, but not paid out during the year. The amount of appropriations applicable to the last fiscal year was $14,538,646.17. There was, therefore, a balance of $1,479,054.37 remaining unexpended and to the credit of the Department on June 30, 1879. The estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, are $14,864,147.95, which exceeds the appropriations for the present fiscal year $361,897.28. The reason for this increase is explained in the Secretary's report. The appropriations available for the present fiscal year are $14,502,250.67, which will, in the opinion of the Secretary, answer all the ordinary demands of the service. The amount drawn from the Treasury from July 1 to November 1, 1879, was $5,770,404.12, of which $1,095,440.33 has been refunded, leaving as the expenditure for that period $4,674,963.79. If the expenditures of the remaining two-thirds of the year do not exceed the proportion for these four months, there will remain unexpended at the end of the year $477,359.30 of the current appropriations. The report of the Secretary shows the gratifying fact that among all the disbursing officers of the pay corps of the Navy there is not one who is a defaulter to the extent of a single dollar. I unite with him in recommending the removal of the Observatory to a more healthful location. That institution reflects credit upon the nation, and has obtained the approbation of scientific men in all parts of the world. Its removal from its present location would not only be conducive to the health of its officers and professors, but would greatly increase its usefulness.

The appropriation for judicial expenses, which has heretofore been made for the Department of Justice in gross, was subdivided at the last session of Congress, and no appropriation whatever was made for the payment of the fees of marshals and their deputies, either in the service of process or for the discharge of other duties; and, since June 30, these officers have continued the performance of their duties, without compensation from the Government, taking upon themselves the necessary incidental outlays, as well as rendering their own services. In only a few unavoidable instances has the proper execution of the process of the United States failed by reason of the absence of the requisite appropriation. This cause of official conduct on the part of these officers, highly creditable to their fidelity, was advised by the Attorney-General, who informed them, however, that they would necessarily have to rely for their compensation upon the prospect of future legislation by Congress. I therefore especially recommend that immediate appropriation be made by Congress for this purpose.

The act making the principal appropriation for the Department of Justice at previous sessions has uniformly contained the following clause: "And for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act approved February 28, 1871, entitled, 'An act to amend an act approved May 30, 1870, entitled "An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union, and for other purposes," or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.'"

No appropriation was made for this purpose for the current year. As no general election for members of Congress occurred, the omission was a matter of little practical importance. Such election will, however, take place during the ensuing year, and the appropriation made for the pay of marshals and deputies should be sufficient to embrace compensation for the services they may be required to perform at such elections.

The business of the Supreme Court is, at present, largely in arrears. It cannot be expected that more causes can be decided than are now disposed of in its annual session, or that by any assiduity the distinguished magistrates who compose the court can accomplish more than is now done. In the courts of many of the circuits, also, the business has increased to such an extent that the delay of justice will call the attention of Congress to an appropriate remedy. It is believed that all is done in each circuit which can fairly be expected from its judicial force. The evils arising from delay are less heavily felt by the United States than by private suitors, as its causes are advanced by the courts when it is seen that they involve the discussion of questions of a public character.

The remedy suggested by the Attorney-General is the appointment of additional circuit judges and the creation of an intermediate court of errors and appeals, which shall relieve the Supreme Court of a part of its jurisdiction, while a large force is also obtained for the performance of circuit duties.

I commend this suggestion to the consideration of Congress. It would seem to afford a complete remedy, and would involve, if ten additional circuit judges are appointed, an expenditure, at the present rate of salaries, of not more than $60,000 a year, which would certainly be small in comparison with the objects to be attained.

The report of the Postmaster-General bears testimony to the general revival of business throughout the country. The receipts of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1879, were $30,041,982.86, being $764,465.91 more than the revenues of the preceding year. The amount realized from the sale of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, and postal cards was $764,465.91 more than in the preceding year, and $2,387,559.23 more than in 1877. The expenditures of the Department were $33,449,899.45, of which the sum of $376,461.63 was paid on liabilities incurred in preceding years.

The expenditures during the year were $801,209.77 less than in the preceding year. This reduction is to be attributed mainly to the operation of the law passed June 17, 1878, changing the compensation of postmasters from a commission on the value of stamps sold to a commission on stamps canceled.

The amount drawn from the Treasury on appropriations in addition to the revenues of the Department was $3,031,454.96, being $2,276,197.86 less than in the preceding year.

The expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, are estimated at $39,920,900, and the receipts from all sources at $32,210,000, leaving a deficiency to be appropriated for out of the Treasury of $7,710,900.

The relations of the Department with railroad companies have been harmonized, notwithstanding the general reduction by Congress of their compensation, by the appropriation for special facilities, and the railway post-office lines have been greatly extended, especially in the Southern States. The interests of the railway-mail service and of the public would be greatly promoted and the expenditures could be more readily controlled by the classification of the employés of the railway-mail service as recommended by the Postmaster-General, the appropriation for salaries, with respect to which the maximum limit is already fixed by law, to be made in gross.

The Postmaster-General recommends an amendment of the law regulating the increase of compensation for increased service and increased speed on star routes, so as to enable him to advertise for proposals for such increased service and speed. He also suggests the advantages to accrue to the commerce of the country from the enactment of a general law authorizing contracts with American-built steamers carrying the American flag, for transporting the mail between ports of the United States and ports of the West Indies and South America at a fixed maximum price per mile, the amount to be expended being regulated by annual appropriations in like manner with the amount paid for the domestic star service.

The arrangement made by the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury for the collection of duty upon books received in the mail from foreign countries has proved so satisfactory in its practical operation that the recommendation is now made that Congress shall extend the provisions of the act of March 3, 1879, under which this arrangement was made, so as to apply to all other dutiable articles received in the mails from foreign countries.

The reports of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, setting forth the present state of our relations with the Indian tribes on our territory, the measures taken to advance their civilization and prosperity, and the progress already achieved by them, will be found of more than ordinary interest. The general conduct of our Indian population has been so satisfactory that the occurrence of two disturbances, which resulted in bloodshed and destruction of property, is all the more to be lamented.

The history of the outbreak on the White River Ute reservation in Western Colorado has become so familiar by elaborate reports in the public press that its remarkable incidents need not be stated here in detail. It is expected that the settlement of this difficulty will lead to such arrangements as will prevent further hostile contact between the Indians and the border settlements in Western Colorado.

The other disturbance occurred at the Mescalero agency in New Mexico, where Victoria, the head of a small band of marauders, after committing many atrocities, being vigorously chased by a military force, made his way across the Mexican border and is now on foreign soil.

While these occurrences, in which a comparatively small number of Indians were engaged, are most deplorable, a vast majority of our Indian population have fully justified the expectations of those who believe that by humane and peaceful influences the Indian can be led to abandon the habits of savage life and to develop a capacity for useful and civilized occupations. What they have already accomplished in the pursuit of agricultural and mechanical work, the remarkable success which has attended the experiment of employing as freighters a class of Indians hitherto counted among the wildest and most intractable, and the general and urgent desire expressed by them for the education of their children, may be taken as sufficient proof that they will be found capable of accomplishing much more if they continue to be wisely and fairly guided. The "Indian policy" sketched in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, the object of which is to make liberal provision for the education of Indian youth, to settle the Indians upon farm-lots in severalty, to give them title in fee to their farms inalienable for a certain number of years, and, when their wants are thus provided for, to dispose by sale of the lands on their reservations not occupied and used by them, a fund to be formed out of the proceeds for the benefit of the Indians, which will gradually relieve the Government of the expenses now provided for by annual appropriations, must commend itself as just and beneficial to the Indians, and as also calculated to remove those obstructions which the existence of large reservations presents to the settlement and development of the country. I therefore earnestly recommend the enactment of a law enabling the Government to give Indians a title in fee, inalienable for twenty-five years, to the farm lands assigned to them by allotment. I also repeat the recommendation made in my first annual message, that a law be passed admitting Indians who can give satisfactory proof of having, by their own labor, supported their families for a number of years, and who are willing to detach themselves from their tribal relations, to the benefit of the homestead act, and to grant them patents containing the same provision of inalienability for a certain period.

The experiment of sending a number of Indian children, of both sexes, to the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, in Virginia, to receive an elementary English education and practical instruction in farming and other useful industries, has led to results so promising that it was thought expedient to turn over the cavalry barracks at Carlisle, in Pennsylvania, to the Interior Department for the establishment of an Indian school on a larger scale. This school has now one hundred and fifty-eight pupils, selected from various tribes, and is in full operation. Arrangements are also made for the education of a number of Indian boys and girls belonging to tribes on the Pacific slope in a similar manner, at Forest Grove, in Oregon. These institutions will commend themselves to the liberality of Congress and to the philanthropic munificence of the American people.

Last spring information was received of the organization of an extensive movement in the Western States, the object of which was the occupation by unauthorized persons of certain lands in the Indian territory ceded by the Cherokees to the Government for the purpose of settlement by other Indian tribes.

On the 29th of April I issued a proclamation warning all persons against participation in such an attempt, and by the co-operation of a military force the invasion was promptly checked. It is my purpose to protect the rights of the Indian inhabitants of that Territory to the full extent of the executive power. But it would be unwise to ignore the fact that a Territory so large and so fertile, with a population so sparse and with so great a wealth of unused resources, will be found more exposed to the repetition of such attempts as happened this year, when the surrounding States are more densely settled and the westward movement of our population looks still more eagerly for fresh lands to occupy. Under such circumstances the difficulty of maintaining the Indian Territory in its present state will greatly increase, and the Indian tribes inhabiting it would do well to prepare for such a contingency. I therefore fully approve of the advice given to them by the Secretary of the Interior on a recent occasion, to divide among themselves in severalty as large a quantity of their lands as they can cultivate; to acquire individual title in fee, instead of their present tribal ownership in common, and to consider in what manner the balance of their lands may be disposed of by the Government for their benefit. By adopting such a policy they would more certainly secure for themselves the value of their possessions, and at the same time promote their progress in civilization and prosperity, than by endeavoring to perpetuate the present state of things in the Territory.

The question whether a change in the control of the Indian service should be made, was in the Forty-fifth Congress referred to a joint committee of both Houses for inquiry and report. In my last annual message I expressed the hope that the decision of that question, then in prospect, "would arrest further agitation of this subject, such agitation being apt to produce a disturbing effect upon the service, as well as the Indians themselves." Since then, the committee having reported, the question has been decided in the negative by a vote in the House of Representatives.

For the reasons here stated, and in view of the fact that further uncertainty on this point will be calculated to obstruct other much needed legislation, to weaken the discipline of the service, and to unsettle salutary measures now in progress for the government and improvement of the Indians, I respectfully recommend that the decision arrived at by Congress at its last session be permitted to stand.

The efforts made by the Department of the Interior to arrest the depredations on the timber lands of the United States have been continued, and have met with considerable success. A large number of cases of trespass have been prosecuted in the courts of the United States; others have been settled, the trespassers offering to make payment to the Government for the value of the timber taken by them. The proceeds of these prosecutions and settlements, turned into the Treasury, far exceed in amount the sums appropriated by Congress for this purpose. A more important result, however, consists in the fact that the destruction of our public forests by depredation, although such cases still occur, has been greatly reduced in extent, and it is probable that if the present policy is vigorously pursued and sufficient provision to that end is made by Congress, such trespasses, at least those on a large scale, can be entirely suppressed, except in the Territories where timber for the daily requirements of the population cannot, under the present state of the law, be otherwise obtained. I therefore earnestly invite the attention of Congress to the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Interior, that a law be enacted enabling the Government to sell timber from the public lands without conveying the fee, where such lands are principally valuable for the timber thereon, such sales to be so regulated as to conform to domestic wants and business requirements, while at the same time guarding against a sweeping destruction of the forests. The enactment of such a law appears to become a more pressing necessity every day.

My recommendations in former messages are renewed in favor of enlarging the facilities of the Department of Agriculture. Agriculture is the leading interest and the permanent industry of our people.

It is to the abundance of agricultural production as compared with our home consumption and the largely increased and highly profitable market abroad which we have enjoyed in recent years that we are mainly indebted for our present prosperity as a people. We must look for its continued maintenance to the same substantial resource. There is no branch of industry in which labor, directed by scientific knowledge, yields such increased production in comparison with unskilled labor, and no branch of the public service to which the encouragement of liberal appropriations can be more appropriately extended. The omission to render such aid is not a wise economy; but, on the contrary, undoubtedly results in losses of immense sums annually that might be saved through well-directed efforts by the Government to promote this vital interest.

The results already accomplished with the very limited means heretofore placed at the command of the Department of Agriculture is an earnest of what may be expected with increased appropriations for the several purposes indicated in the report of the Commissioner with a view to placing the Department upon a footing which will enable it to prosecute more effectively the objects for which it is established.

Appropriations are needed for a more complete laboratory, for the establishment of a veterinary division, and a division of forestry, and for an increase of force.

The requirements for these and other purposes, indicated in the report of the Commissioner under the head of the immediate necessities of the Department, will not involve any expenditure of money that the country cannot with propriety now undertake in the interests of agriculture.

It is gratifying to learn from the Bureau of Education the extent to which educational privileges throughout the United States have been advanced during the year. No more fundamental responsibility rests upon Congress than that of devising appropriate measures of financial aid to education, supplemental to local action in the States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia. The wise forethought of the founders of our Government has not only furnished the basis for the support of the common-school systems of the newer States, but laid the foundations for the maintenance of their universities and colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts. Measures in accordance with this traditional policy for the further benefit of all these interests, and the extension of the same advantages to every portion of the country, it is hoped, will receive your favorable consideration.

To preserve and perpetuate the national literature should be among the foremost cares of the national legislature. The library gathered at the Capitol still remains unprovided with any suitable accommodations for its rapidly increasing stores. The magnitude and importance of the collection, increased as it is by the deposits made under the law of copyright, by domestic and foreign exchanges, and by the scientific library of the Smithsonian Institution, call for building accommodations which shall be at once adequate and fire-proof. The location of such a public building, which should provide for the pressing necessities of the present, and for the vast increase of the nation's books in the future, is a matter which addresses itself to the discretion of Congress. It is earnestly recommended as a measure which should unite all suffrages, and which should no longer be delayed.

The joint commission created by the act of Congress of August 2, 1876, for the purpose of supervising and directing the completion of the Washington National Monument, of which commission the President is a member, has given careful attention to this subject, and already the strengthening of the foundation has so far progressed as to insure the entire success of this part of the work. A massive layer of masonry has been introduced below the original foundation, widening the base, increasing the stability of the structure, and rendering it possible to carry the shaft to completion. It is earnestly recommended that such further appropriations be made for the continued prosecution of the work as may be necessary for the completion of this national monument at an early day.

In former messages, impressed with the importance of the subject, I have taken occasion to commend to Congress the adoption of a generous policy toward the District of Columbia. The report of the commissioners of the District, herewith transmitted, contains suggestions and recommendations, to all of which I earnestly invite your careful attention. I ask your early and favorable consideration of the views which they express as to the urgent need of legislation for the reclamation of the marshes of the Potomac and its eastern branch, within the limits of the city, and for the repair of the streets of the capital heretofore laid with wooden blocks, and now by decay rendered almost impassable, and a source of imminent danger to the health of its citizens. The means at the disposal of the commissioners are wholly inadequate for the accomplishment of these important works, and should be supplemented by timely appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

The filling of the flats in front of the city will add to the adjacent lands and parks now owned by the United States a large and valuable domain, sufficient, it is thought, to reimburse its entire cost, and will also, as an incidental result, secure the permanent improvement of the river for the purposes of navigation.

The Constitution having invested Congress with supreme and exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, its citizens must of necessity look to Congress alone for all needful legislation affecting their interests, and as the territory of this District is the common property of the people of the United States, who, equally with its resident citizens, are interested in the prosperity of their capital, I cannot doubt that you will be amply sustained by the general voice of the country in any measures you may adopt for this purpose.

I also invite the favorable consideration of Congress to the wants of the public schools of this District, as exhibited in the report of the commissioners. While the number of pupils is rapidly increasing, no adequate provision exists for a corresponding increase of school accommodation, and the commissioners are without the means to meet this urgent need. A number of the buildings now used for school purposes are rented, and are, in important particulars, unsuited for the purpose. The cause of popular education in the District of Columbia is surely entitled to the same consideration at the hands of the National Government as in the several States and Territories, to which munificent grants of the public lands have been made for the endowment of schools and universities.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 1, 1879.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message, with the accompanying documents, will lie on the table and be printed.

FINANCIAL REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the year 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

DEATH OF SENATOR CHANDLER.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, the sorrowful duty devolves on me of announcing to the Senate of the United States the recent and sudden death of my late colleague, ZACHARIAH CHANDLER of Michigan, which occurred in the city of Chicago on the 1st day of November just passed.

In making this announcement, it is not my purpose now to speak of the character and services of one so long and so notably a member of this body; but at some suitable time I will invite the Senate to express, by resolution and by eulogy, its sense of the irreparable loss the nation sustains in the death of so distinguished a citizen.

Mr. President, as a mark of respect for the memory of a Senator present at our last adjournment but absent now forevermore, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 1, 1879.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee that in Thy gracious providence these Thy servants, the Representatives of the people, have been permitted to assemble together once more and to resume their labors.

O Thou who art the source of all wisdom and knowledge and truth give to these Thy servants the spirit of a sound mind and judgment and true patriotism, that they may ever keep in view steadily those interests of the people committed to their care. And may Thy divine wisdom and goodness guide them in all their deliberations.

Bless Thy servants, the President and the Vice-President of the United States, the officers and members of the Senate, the officers of this House and all its members, all departments of the Government and all sections of our common country. And may peace, under the blessing of God, and prosperity prevail everywhere throughout our land.

These and all Thy gifts and blessings we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

[SEAL.] JOHN H. GEAR.

By the Governor:
J. A. HILL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the members-elect whose credentials have just been presented to the House, be sworn in.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the certificate of election of Waldo Hutchins, elected on the 4th of November last to represent the twelfth district of the State of New York, and to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Alexander Smith, who died immediately after his election in 1878. I ask this certificate be read, and that Mr. Hutchins be sworn in as a member.

It may be well for me to state here, Mr. Speaker, that the State canvassers in my State will not meet until the 12th of December, and if the technical demand and usage of the House be complied with, Mr. Hutchins cannot take his seat until that time. But as the certificate of the district or county canvassers shows him to have been elected by thirty-five hundred majority, and as there is no question in the case whatever, I see no good reason why Mr. Hutchins should be deprived of his seat from now until the 12th of this month; and therefore I ask the certificate be read by the Clerk, and that Mr. Hutchins be sworn in with the other new members.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask a question for information. If I understand the statement made by the gentleman from New York, there is no certificate of election in this case, by the governor; is there?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is not. As I stated, the State canvassers have not yet met.

Mr. GARFIELD. Do I understand the gentleman as stating that there is no contest?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is no contest; there is no notice of any contest.

Mr. GARFIELD. Was there any opposing candidate at all?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would not be willing, for one, to allow it to be drawn into a precedent that we should have any one sworn in without the presentation of a certificate. But if gentlemen around me are satisfied there is no contest, and no question about the election of Mr. Hutchins, I suppose there will be no objection to the course proposed by the gentleman from New York; but it would certainly be unwise to establish as a precedent that a man should be sworn in who brings no regular certificate.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If there was any question in the case whatever, or any doubt about it, I would not present Mr. Hutchins to be sworn in.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to say a word. I suppose this can only be done, if done at all, by unanimous consent, and that cannot create a precedent. I have no doubt of the facts stated by the gentleman from New York in regard to the election of Mr. Hutchins, and that he is entitled to take his seat here. I see no objection to his being sworn in at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that that portion of the paper presented by the gentleman from New York which has reference to the election of Mr. Hutchins be read so that it may make a part of the record.

Mr. GARFIELD. The giving of the consent asked can be suspended until the paper is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The whole number of votes given for the office of Representative in Congress, twelfth congressional district, for the unexpired term of Alexander Smith, deceased, was 23,867, of which Waldo Hutchins received 13,543; Nicholas Smith received 10,146; scattering, 19.

Mr. CONGER. What authority certifies to that state of facts?

The SPEAKER. The certificate will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
Westchester County Clerk's Office, ss:

I hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing with the original statement remaining on file and of record in this office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of such original, and a duplicate of which has been forwarded to the State canvassers at Albany, New York.

Witness my hand and official seal at White Plains, this 28th day of November, 1879.

[SEAL] JOHN M. ROWELL, Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the swearing in of Mr. Hutchins.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it be understood that there is no question raised about it, and that this case does not form a precedent.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen whose certificates have been read will be kind enough to come forward and qualify.

Mr. WALDO HUTCHINS, Mr. C. P. BERRY, Mr. HORACE DAVIS, Mr. H. F. PAGE, Mr. ROMUALDO PACHECO, and Mr. WILLIAM G. THOMPSON then appeared and qualified by taking the oath of office prescribed in section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

NOTIFICATION OF ORGANIZATION.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Mr. ATKINS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The SPEAKER appointed as members of the committee on the part of the House, Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. BICKNELL of Indiana, and Mr. GARFIELD of Ohio.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent of the House that he may have the privilege of inviting on the floor, during their brief stay in this city, two members of the British Parliament, Mr. Albert Pell and Mr. C. S. Read.

There was no objection.

RECESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for thirty minutes.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House take a further recess for thirty minutes in order to give time to the committee to report.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly took a further recess for thirty minutes.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, the joint committee appointed to wait upon the President and inform him that the two Houses are ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make have discharged that duty, and he desires us to say to the two Houses that he will send a communication to them immediately.

Mr. RODGERS, Private Secretary of the President, having been announced at the bar, said:

Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the House of Representatives a message in writing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the message just received from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read the annual message.

[It will be found in the proceedings of the Senate.]

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the annual message of the President and the accompanying documents be referred to the Committee of the Whole and be printed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. This resolution which I have offered implies that the message shall be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the House. I suppose there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The resolution just read is the ordinary resolution to print the usual number of copies. If additional copies are desired the printing must be provided for by a formal resolution, which, under the law, would go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Where the printing is in excess of the usual number, then, I understand, it is a matter for the Committee on Printing. My resolution simply provides that the message and documents be referred and printed; by that I mean printed in pamphlet form.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the resolution, if adopted, will be to provide for the printing of the usual number of copies.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, as follows:

To Mr. CONVERSE, for three days, on account of important business;

To Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, for fifteen days, on account of important business;

To Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, for thirty days, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. KING, until the 8th instant.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. The resolution ought to go to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the form of his resolution, and ask him whether it should not be a direction to the head of the Department and not be a request to a subordinate?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the first part of the resolution be altered so as to read, "the Secretary of the Interior be directed" instead of "the Commissioner of the General Land Office be requested."

Mr. JONAS. Very well. Let it be modified in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so amended, and as thus amended the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DARIEN CANAL—MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I desire now to submit the remarks of which I gave notice yesterday, upon Senate joint resolution No. 43.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island, pursuant to notice given by him yesterday, calls up for present consideration the joint resolution which he has indicated.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 43) in relation to the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Darien by European powers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, upon which he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I have requested that the joint resolution introduced by me in June last and referred to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations might be temporarily withdrawn from the consideration of that committee that I may briefly state my reasons for introducing it, especially as these reasons have been misunderstood, and misstated in Europe, as well as in our own country. I will ask the Secretary to read the preamble and joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the people of this Union have for upward of fifty years adhered to the doctrine asserted by President Monroe, "as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future 'occupation' by any European power:" Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the people of these States would not view, without serious inquietude, any attempt by the powers of Europe to establish, under their protection and domination, a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien, and such action on the part of any European power could not be regarded "in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

Mr. BURNSIDE. This, Mr. President, is simply a re-enunciation of what is known as the Monroe doctrine, a cardinal principle of American policy which has for upward of half a century secured us from foreign interference in or foreign control of the affairs of the western continent. This doctrine was embodied in the annual message of President Monroe to the Eighteenth Congress, which first met in this city on the 1st day of December, 1823. At that time the Russians wanted to extend their dominions on the Pacific coast of North America so far southward as to include California, and King Ferdinand of Spain, who had been reinstated upon his throne by French bayonets, after having been banished by his disaffected subjects, was endeavoring to form an alliance with other European powers which would force back to their allegiance the revolted colonies of Spain in South America. Against this and similar demonstrations President Monroe formally protested, declaring to the potentates of the Old World that the United States would not tolerate the extension of their despotic machinations and intrigues to the New.

This Monroe doctrine, Mr. President, has been the safeguard of these United States, and has been appropriately designated as the club of Hercules and the shield of Telamon, the former to ward off the armed intervention of European powers, and the latter to protect this continent from colonial encroachment. Acting upon its provisions, the United States should maintain its position as the governing power on this continent, and should carefully but positively exercise its prerogatives. While we as a nation do not propose to unnecessarily interfere with the course of any independent American power, or of any colonial government dependent upon a European power, we should bear in mind that we are the dominant power on the North American continent.

Providence established our Republic in the wilderness, separated by the broad Atlantic from the intrigues and the corruptions of the Old World, which would have smothered the bright flames of liberty. Our fathers were permitted to achieve their independence, and in our day there has been an internal struggle for the perpetuity of the Union which has resulted in a firmer consolidation of the national power. We have not only maintained the position given us by our forefathers as against foreign powers, but we have suppressed the most gigantic rebellion known to history. We have also passed through a fierce struggle relating to the succession to the chief office of the nation, a struggle which in any other country would have resulted in revolution, possibly anarchy. We settled the trouble by legislative action on the part of the people's representatives, and the people have acquiesced in and ratified that action.

Having perfected and strengthened our own existence, having attained a high standard of moral and intellectual excellence, and having developed an unequaled mechanical, agricultural, and mining prosperity, we must not permit any infringement of our rights on this continent, or suffer any steps to be taken on any part of it which will interfere with progressive independence, civil or religious. Should any of the western governments now dependent upon European powers successfully renounce their allegiance we should regard them as our political wards, and should encourage them in maintaining their independence; but we should not, and could not, allow them to take any step backward in the march of freedom and civilization. Should they attempt to establish a government less free than the one which they have cast off we should at once intervene and see that they make an advance instead of a retrograde movement.

That the colonies of Great Britain on our northern frontier will take any step looking to independence at present is hardly probable, but in the course of time two adjacent populations, generally of the same origin, speaking the same language and having a common interest, must gravitate toward each other. Substantially, they are moving in the same channel that we are, and we need give ourselves no uneasiness as to the result of the problem which they are working out. With respect to Mexico and other governments near our southern border there is an entirely different state of affairs. Mexico is chronically in a distracted condition, and although it was respected by the United States when our flag floated in triumph over its capital, and subsequently delivered, in large part, by the friendly offices of the United States from foreign intervention, it sometimes appears incapable of self-government, and we may find it our unpleasant but imperative duty to control it by some process.

In my opinion, Mr. President, the time is not far distant when this Government will have to take a new departure in its management of contiguous or newly acquired territory. We should not necessarily invest with all the rights and immunities of citizenship people who may fall under our protection or control, and who are not qualified to exercise the duties of that citizenship, and some system of protection will necessarily be adopted by us to meet future exigencies in the management of such territories. We do not and should not desire acquisition of territory, but we must have peace on our borders. Our right to pursue Mexican marauders into their own territory when the Mexican authorities are not capable of controlling them has about been conceded. At all events, governmental armed forces have been authorized and directed to pursue these marauders into Mexico. This can only be a temporary expedient. The government of Mexico must acquire strength enough to control its citizens and prevent them from encroaching upon our rights, or we must assume the responsibility of controlling them ourselves. The herdsman never attempts to control a wild mule by seizing its hind legs. He takes him by the head. We cannot control Mexico by handling and regulating its frontier. As for myself, Mr. President, I hope that the day is far distant when internal dissension and inability to handle its own frontier will compel us to take it by the head. If the latter emergency should arise the United States should not hesitate to meet it. There is no "holy alliance" on this continent, no "balance of power;" but the United States should exercise the governing and directing power. As I said of governments dependent upon European powers who may throw off their allegiance, that they should not be allowed to take a step backward, so I say of independent governments on this continent; they should not be allowed to take a step backward in the march of civil and religious liberty.

Mr. President, one of the most impressive sermons that I ever listened to was delivered by Bishop Howe, of Pennsylvania, many years ago, and before he had attained the high position which he now so ably fills. His text was taken from one of the psalms, and read as follows:

Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God.

In the most eloquent language he portrayed the great danger which rich and prosperous communities were in of forgetting the great source of all their worldly benefits, contenting themselves with luxurious ease and allowing the very blessing which had been showered upon them to make them, in their selfishness, forget God. The Good Father has enabled us to establish upon this continent a great and free government. He has increased our riches, our intelligence, and our strength. With this he has imposed upon us certain duties, and we should not, as a people, wrap ourselves in the robes of luxury and ease, and declare ourselves content, no matter what may be going on in other governments on this continent. A duty rests upon us to see that this American land shall be devoted to freedom, and if we fail in the performance of that duty, a retribution will surely fall upon us.

At the present time, Mr. President, we should bear in mind that the Monroe doctrine not only declares that the American governments are not to be considered as subjects of future colonization by any European power, but that we should not view any interference, on the part of those powers, for the purpose of suppressing the existing independent States of America, or, to quote the exact words, "or controlling in any other manner their destiny, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

The construction of an interoceanic ship-canal by European capitalists, under the protection of a European government or by the authority of a European charter, would not only enable that government to control the destiny of the independent states through which it would pass, either Panama or Honduras or Nicaragua, but it would be dangerous to the peace and safety of the United States. An interoceanic canal will really be a maritime highway between the numerous seaports on the Atlantic and Pacific coast of the United States, and it appears to me that wisdom and justice require that the Government of the United States should control that highway. It should be open to our commercial marine in times of peace, and to our naval vessels in times of war, without any European jurisdiction. The construction of an interoceanic canal with European capital, under the protection of a European power or under a European charter, would be an obtrusive interference with our home affairs, which could but justly excite resentment, and which the citizens of the United States would never tolerate.

The contingency of a construction of an interoceanic canal, by any of the governments through whose territory it may pass, need hardly be discussed, because none of them have the financial resources necessary to its construction; yet had they the power, physically and financially, to construct the work, the duty of the United States would be none the less imperative to see that the control of it should rest with this Government. But it has been asserted, Mr. President, that no matter who may construct an interoceanic canal its control will be a question of power. In other words, that the European governments will, if they see fit, control by force of arms this American naval thoroughfare.

Sir, that would be an impossibility. When the Monroe doctrine was originally promulgated we were just recovering from a war which had cost much blood and treasure, which had disarranged our industries, checked our commerce, and increased our taxation. The European powers at that time had large accumulations of capital, and a surplus of population, from which war would relieve them, so that a declaration of hostilities would not have interrupted their ordinary pursuits or have materially affected their national credit. Yet Mr. Monroe and his supporters did not hesitate. They did not request European governments to let this continent alone, but they defiantly asserted that any such interference could not be regarded "in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States." The people, without distinction of party, rallied around the banner thus unfurled, on which was inscribed "No foreign intervention," with a zealous confidence previously unknown.

How different is the condition of our country now! Our population has been enhanced by the natural increase, as well as by millions of the toilers of other lands who have come here to enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty. Iron rails bind the vast area of our territory, in every direction, while strong arms and honest hearts are successfully toiling in the mines, in the manufactories, and in the broad fields for their livelihood, and are thus augmenting our national wealth. To such perfection has the inventive genius of the land carried the machinery used for agricultural and mechanical purposes that it would be possible for the women of America, in case of urgent need and patriotic call, to produce almost every desired supply of subsistence, clothing, and equipment. But few of the men would be required to do the heavy work in the founderies, in the manufactories, and in the field. The main part of the work could be done by patriotic women. This would enable an unparalleled body of men to take the field; and it is estimated that we could raise, arm, equip, and subsist an army of five million of men. We could by modern appliances in the way of torpedoes, floating batteries, &c., render access to our harbors by foreign ships impossible. What foreign power or powers could send a force to the American continent and effect any lodgment, in the face of such a body of national defenders and such means of national defense? It would be impossible to even collect such a fleet of transports as would be required to bring over such a hostile army of invasion to our shores.

I am well aware, Mr. President, that the Monroe doctrine has never been enacted by Congress and placed upon the national statute-book, but it has been recognized as a prominent feature of the unwritten law of the land, which has governed our nation in its international relations. It has been intimated that the author of the Monroe doctrine was Mr. Canning, but there is a letter written in October, 1823, to President Monroe by Ex-President Jefferson, to whom he had applied for advice, which disposed of the intimation that this great American principle was adopted at the suggestion of a British statesman. Mr. Jefferson wrote:

> Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe; our second, never to suffer Europe to interfere with cisatlantic affairs.

Daniel Webster said in Congress on the 11th of April, 1826, speaking of the promulgation of the Monroe doctrine:

> I have understood from good authority that it was considered, weighed, and distinctly approved by the President's advisers at that time.

The Cabinet was then composed of John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State; William H. Crawford, of Georgia, Secretary of the Treasury; John C. Calhoun, Secretary of War; Samuel L. Southard, Secretary of the Navy, and William Wirt, Attorney-General.

Henry Clay, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, offered a joint resolution which gave a legislative indorsement to President Monroe's declarations, and the debates at either end of the Capitol show in what high estimation the doctrine was held by the leading Senators and Representatives. Its promulgation was regarded as a new departure for our Republic. John C. Calhoun said later in life, January 14, 1846, that "no man can view with stronger feelings of indignation than I do the improper interference of European powers with the nations of this continent."

Daniel Webster said in his great speech, April 11, 1826, on the Panama congress:

> I concur entirely with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Hemphill] that this declaration of Mr. Monroe was wise, seasonable, and patriotic.

James Buchanan declared that—

> This declaration was re-echoed by millions of freemen; it was received with enthusiasm in every part of the Union; it answered the purpose for which it was intended.

Even the liberal statesmen of England acquiesced in the principles promulgated by Mr. Monroe. The prime minister of Great Britain, Mr. Canning, one of the most enlightened statesmen of his age, used the following language:

> It concerned the United States, under aspects and interests as immediate and commanding as it did or could any of the states of Europe. They were the first power on that continent, and evidently the leading power. They were connected with Spanish America by their position, as they were with Europe by their relations; and they also stood connected with those new states by political relations. Was it possible they could see with indifference their fate decided only by Europe? Could Europe expect such indifference? Had no new epoch arrived in the relative position of the United States toward Europe which Europe must acknowledge? Were the great political and commercial interests which hang upon the destinies of the new continent to be canvassed and judged in this hemisphere [Europe] without the co-operation, or even knowledge, of the United States?

This Monroe doctrine, Mr. President, has never lost its hold upon the pride and patriotic affections of the American people. Again and again has it been cited by our Secretaries of State, in defense of our national diplomatic positions, and referred to by our diplomats as defining our line of duty. In 1853, when Louis Napoleon was strengthening his newly erected throne by restoring the martial glories of the French Empire, the venerable General Cass, then a United States Senator, thus alluded to the feelings entertained toward the United States in Europe, as a sign of the times worthy of serious consideration:

> We cannot—
> Said the veteran statesman of Michigan—
> disguise from ourselves that our progress and prospects, while they are a reproach to many of the governments of the Old World, have excited their enmity by the contrasts they exhibit, and by the dangerous example they offer to the oppressed masses, inviting them to do as we have done, and to become free as we are free. He who does not know that there is not a government in Europe which is a friend to our institutions has much to learn of the impression that our past, our present, and our probable future are producing among them. But what we have to apprehend is plans for arresting our extent and prosperity, the seizure of positions by which we might be annoyed and circumscribed, and the creation of an influence, of schemes of policy offering powerful obstacles to our future advancement.

In ten years from the utterance of this prediction it was fulfilled by the appearance of French troops in Mexico to support the government of the ill-starred Maximilian. Hon. William H. Seward, then Secretary of State, protested vigorously against this armed interference in the politics of our sister republic; and he also opposed a scheme for establishing a colony in Mexico by Dr. William M. Gwin and associates, which he asserted "the United States Government could not look upon with satisfaction, as martial or political enemies on the opposite banks of the Rio Grande." If it was true that the people of this country would not tolerate a colony in Mexico, can it be possible that they will permit the European powers, or any company under European protection or influence, to construct and control an interoceanic canal across the Isthmus, which would be so useful in times of peace, and so indispensable in times of war? The establishment of such a great public work in such a manner would be fatal to the preservation and development of those American ideas on which are founded the hopes of the social welfare and the enlightened progress of the entire continent of North America.

Congress should act upon this grave question without delay, ere any foreign power makes a demonstration for the control of the interoceanic canal; and a grave responsibility will rest upon us should we now abandon to the chance of circumstances the maintenance of our supremacy on this continent. In adopting such a joint resolution as I have had the honor to present, the United States Government will exercise a right incontestably belonging to it, will sustain the honor of the Republic, will advance the cause of progressive, civil, and religious liberty, and will receive the support of the people. We have had enough of internal agitation and of sectional strife. Let us now reaffirm and stand by the Monroe doctrine, which can but meet the sympathy and the conviction not only of the true-hearted citizens of this Republic, but of the lovers of liberty throughout the world.

I now, Mr. President, withdraw my motion to relieve the committee from the further consideration of this resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Rhode Island is withdrawn.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GARLAND. If there is no further legislative business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at one o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 2, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared to-day: JAMES B. BELFORD of Colorado, HORATIO G. FISHER of Pennsylvania, AMAZIAH B. JAMES of New York, WILLIAM H. KITCHIN of North Carolina, BURWELL B. LEWIS of Alabama, EDWARD L. MARTIN of Delaware, and THADDEUS C. POUND of Wisconsin.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution at this time——

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour, which will begin——

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent of the House that there be a call of States this morning for bills and joint resolutions as of Monday. Many members have bills prepared for introduction, and they might as well be referred now.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] yield to me to offer a resolution?

Mr. COX. I have asked unanimous consent that the States be called for bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hope that the regular order will be proceeded with. I think it is better that the business of the House shall proceed regularly, at least at the beginning of the session.

Mr. COX. Does my colleague [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] object to having bills introduced to-day?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not object to anything; but I would rather have the regular order, and must call for it.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order the Chair must recognize as in the nature of an objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] Several gentlemen have applied to the Chair for permission to ask unanimous consent of the House to offer resolutions for reference only, to which there would probably be no objection. If the regular order is demanded the Chair will have to proceed with it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not desire to object to the introduction by unanimous consent of propositions which will give rise to no debate. But I give notice that I shall call for the regular order after that has been done by a few members.

NICARAGUA INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 121) in regard to the Nicaragua Interoceanic Canal; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble and joint resolution were read, as follows:

Whereas the project for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Nicaragua is recognized as a necessity for the prosperity of the commerce of the world and the development of the maritime and commercial interests of the United States; and,

Whereas such an enterprise must of necessity be considered as of international utility under the protection of the Government of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, &c., That the Government of the United States pledges to accord full and entire protection to a company which shall be granted the concession by the government of Nicaragua for the construction of said interoceanic canal, and will secure to said company the peaceful enjoyment of the rights conceded by such grant.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the joint resolution be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COX. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has control of that subject by the reference of a bill introduced by a colleague of the gentleman at the last session.

Mr. REAGAN. When that bill was referred I suggested that it ought to go to the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] suggested that the bill might come up for action, subject to reference to the Committee on Commerce. There was implied consent at least that the Committee on Commerce should have jurisdiction of the bill, and understanding that the gentleman from New York would not object I did not contest the reference.

The SPEAKER. The question of reference is for the House to determine.

Mr. COX. If I remember rightly a vote was taken upon the reference of the bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and it was so referred by the House. I am entirely content, however, that the committee of which the gentleman from Texas is chairman should have control of this bill, with the understanding that the Committee on Foreign Affairs shall report back the former proposition without action.

Mr. REAGAN. My memory, Mr. Speaker, does not exactly agree with that of the gentleman from New York. I think I raised the question that the proposition should go to the Committee on Commerce; and it was suggested that, as it would not come up for action, it might go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. On that ground I waived any objection to the reference to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is a new joint resolution. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] asks that it may go to the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from New York, as the Chair understands, moves an amendment to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COX. I withdraw any objection to the reference proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. There being no further objection, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution was referred accordingly, and ordered to be printed.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to offer for adoption the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas eleven months of trial has demonstrated conclusively that the resumption of specie payments entered upon on the 1st day of January, 1879, has been a success equal to the hopes of the most sanguine friends of that measure; and

Whereas it has been equally well and fully established during the same period that as a nation we have the ability to keep in circulation at par with coin $350,000,000 of United States notes, commonly called greenbacks; and

Whereas under the operation of these, in connection with the coinage of the silver dollar, the financial and commercial interests of the country in the last eleven months have attained a degree of prosperity unequaled in any similar period in the last twenty years; and

Whereas any agitation of the financial question at this time would have a tendency to unsettle public confidence and produce unrest and distrust in the business affairs of the country: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House sound policy demands and safe legislation requires that no change be made at this session of Congress in reference to any of the measures referred to, but that in view of the present prosperous condition of the country financially we should "let well enough alone."

The SPEAKER. To what committee does the gentleman desire to refer this resolution?

Mr. PRICE. I would prefer to have a vote upon it if the House will consent. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" and "Oh, no."]

The SPEAKER. The statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] was that he would ask for the regular order except as to propositions which gentlemen desired to refer by unanimous consent.

Mr. PRICE. Then let the resolution go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, if gentlemen are afraid to vote upon it.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2408) to regulate immigration; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to this House a certified copy of the contract entered into by the late George Williams, of Iowa, for work upon the improvements in the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, together with a copy of the claim filed by said Williams or his heirs, the names of the engineers appointed to re-examine said work, with a copy of their report, together with all testimony on file in support of or touching said claim, and the authority upon which he paid said award.

CLAIM OF JAMES A. BRIGGS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) in relation to the claim of James A. Briggs; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask the reference of this joint resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. Let the joint resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the claim of James A. Briggs, administrator of Charles M. Briggs, deceased, for cotton alleged to have been taken by United States authorities in Washington County, Mississippi, in the year 1863, sold, and the proceeds covered in the Treasury of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the United States Court of Claims for settlement; and the jurisdiction of said court is hereby extended to embrace the hearing and settlement of said cause, anything to the contrary in the organic law of said court or the rules of practice made in pursuance thereof notwithstanding.

Mr. CONGER. This resolution should go to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The subject has been before the Committee on War Claims, and has been once before the Committee on the Judiciary. The difficulty is that neither the Court of Claims nor the southern claims commission has any jurisdiction of this question. The matter should go to the Committee on the Judiciary that they may report some remedy by a change in the organic law of the court.

Mr. CONGER. I think we should have a report from the Committee on War Claims as to the disposition to be made of this class of claims against the Government. If that committee shall report favorably to the House consenting to this reference to the Judiciary Committee, it can then be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] introducing this bill for relief moves that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. And I move to amend that motion by referring it to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Michigan moves that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a division of the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 85, noes 88.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, as this is the commencement of this kind of action in reference to these war claims, I demand the yeas and nays on my motion to refer to the Committee on War Claims.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 115, nays 111, not voting 66; as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a statement of all moneys paid into the Treasury under the act of June 7, 1872, title 53, Revised Statutes, since the time of its enactment, by the respective United States shipping commissioners.

Mr. WHITE. Let that resolution lie over.

Mr. DUNNELL. The resolution ought to go to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COX. The object of this resolution is to furnish information in reference to a bill now pending before the Committee on Commerce. I want the information sent to that committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule this resolution, if referred to the Committee on Commerce, would be reported back within six days.

Mr. COX. The bill is already before the committee; and I want to furnish information for their action. I presume gentlemen have no objection to having information.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the resolution had better follow the usual course—go to the committee and be reported back.

Mr. COX. It may never come back.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the committee must report it back within six days.

Mr. COX. Then let it be referred.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILLITS. Is that bill on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope my friend will not object to fixing a time for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLITS] object to fixing a day?

Mr. WILLITS. Is not this a private bill?

Mr. FINLEY. Does not this request require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I object.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at one o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORT OF PUBLIC PRINTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Public Printer for the year ending June 30, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the seventeenth annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting a copy of his accounts as to post-office expenditures rendered to and adjusted by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, copies of the accounts rendered to and settled with the First Comptroller for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The documents from the Treasurer are very voluminous, and if there be no objection the Chair will refer the question of printing them to the Committee on Printing. The Chair hears no objection, and that reference is ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GARLAND presented the petition of Thomas W. King, late private in Company A, First Dragoons, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of J. E. England and others, citizens of Lonoke and Jefferson Counties, Arkansas, praying the establishment of a mail-route from Lonoke, Arkansas, on the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad, to Plum Bayou post-office, in Jefferson County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of Margaret Miller, of Stockbridge, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petition of John Flynn, of Bangor, Maine, an individual who served in the late war, and who was very severely disabled, praying for an increase of pension. I desire particularly to invite the attention of the Committee on Pensions to the consideration of this subject. This is one of those cases where it is very difficult to draw the line as to which class of pension the pensioner is entitled to receive at the present time. This petitioner lost an arm. If he had lost the other arm the law would have given him a pension at a certain rate; the other arm was disabled, but not so disabled that he requires the constant attendance of another person, and he does not get that sum; but he is so disabled that he thinks, and I think, his is a case that might be made exceptional, and that he ought to have an increased pension. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of S. D. Babcock, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, and other citizens of New York, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the Harlem River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. Finance or Commerce?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire the bill to be referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. BECK. I think, as the bill relates to foreign-built ships, it ought to go to the Committee on Commerce; but I am not sure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will take that reference, if there be no objection.

Mr. BECK. I should rather have it referred to the Finance Committee, but I believe it ought to go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL. Do I understand that the reference of the bill is to be changed from the Committee on Finance to the Committee on Commerce?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Kentucky to indicate that.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that would be a very wrong reference. The bill ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. I prefer that it should go to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 742) for the relief of Mary A. Lord; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 750) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to receive by donation a site for, and to construct, a marine hospital at Nebraska City, on the Missouri River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States Treasury notes; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That from and after the passage of this resolution the Treasury notes of the United States shall be receivable for all dues to the United States, excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender; and any of said notes hereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Stephen A. McCarty, praying to be restored as lieutenant-commander in the Navy, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule the resolution will be read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment be authorized to have printed for its use the testimony taken by it at Newport in pursuance of the resolutions of last session directing inquiry in relation to certain matters in the State of Rhode Island.

LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the present volume of United States notes should not be reduced, and that said notes ought to continue to be a legal tender in the payment of debts.

TRUST FUNDS OF UTE INDIANS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas an agreement was made on the 13th day of September, 1873, between the United States and the confederate bands of the Ute Nation for the cession of certain lands in Colorado, which agreement was ratified April 29, 1874; and

Whereas the fourth article of said agreement was in words as follows: "The United States agrees to set apart and hold as a perpetual trust for the Ute Indians a sum of money, or its equivalent in bonds, which shall be sufficient to produce the sum of $25,000 per annum, which sum of $25,000 per annum shall be disbursed or invested at the discretion of the President, as he may direct, for the use and benefit of said Ute Indians annually;" and

Whereas the said Ute Indians claim that only a portion of the money due under said agreement has been paid to them, and that there is a large amount due and unpaid: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate whether such payments or investments have been made in accordance with the fourth article of said agreement, and, if any portion of the money due under said agreement has been paid or invested for the benefit of said Indians, at what time and in what manner such payments were made, or in what way invested, and what amount, if any, there is due the said Indians under said agreement.

PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yesterday I offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information. I move now that the resolution be taken up for action.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, on the 2d instant:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish the Senate, at an early day, a tabulated statement showing the receipts and expenditures for each fiscal year, from 1865 to 1879 inclusive, on account of appropriations under title 41, sections 3687 to 3692 inclusive, of the Revised Statutes, known as permanent annual appropriations, and all other permanent annual appropriations that are paid from the Treasury, separating, as far as practicable, the expenditures by each Department and the items thereof, especially as to captured and abandoned property, salaries and expenses of steamboat inspectors, collection of customs duties, mints, expenses of the public debt, and fees of supervisors of elections.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I wish to submit but a very few remarks.

The resolution offered by myself yesterday and which is now before the Senate looks to information, with the intention of following it by a bill to repeal all permanent annual appropriations except those relating to the interest on the public debt.

It is known that the Revised Statutes, and subsequent statutes, now give the different Departments power to expend large sums of money in what are known as permanent annual appropriations, which Congress is not called upon, from year to year, to pass upon. For some years, since 1865 probably, those appropriations have amounted to more than the regular annual appropriations made by Congress. I believe the present year the Secretary estimates this amount, excluding interest on the public debt, at over $60,000,000.

It appears to me that so large a sum ought not to be paid without the attention of Congress being called to it annually. In fact the Secretary of the Treasury in his report, which has just been placed on our tables, calls the attention of Congress to the subject, and he himself favors the repeal of many of those acts. The intention of the resolution offered by myself is to call from the Secretary information relating to these large amounts that have been expended annually without the notice of Congress, with the purpose of following it by a bill to repeal all permanent annual appropriations except those relating to the interest on the public debt.

Mr. CONKLING. Is this the same resolution we had at the last session?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, sir; this resolution never has been before Congress that I know of heretofore, nor has anything similar to it been before Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. When was it introduced?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yesterday, and printed, and it is now upon the tables of Senators.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] suggests that I shall read what the Secretary of the Treasury says himself on this subject in his report, which has just been sent to Congress. After making other suggestions, the Secretary recommends—

That all appropriations, except for the interest of the public debt, be limited to a period not exceeding two years, and that their expenditure be strictly confined to the period of time for which they are appropriated; and that all permanent and indefinite appropriations, made more than four years ago, except that for the public debt, be repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONUMENT AT YORKTOWN, VIRGINIA.

Mr. GOODE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas on Monday, the 29th day of October, 1781, it was "Resolved, That the United States in Congress assembled will cause to be erected at York, in Virginia, a marble column, adorned with emblems of the alliance between the United States and his most Christian majesty, and inscribed with a succinct narrative of the surrender of Earl Cornwallis to his excellency General Washington, commander-in-chief of the combined forces of America and France; to his excellency the Count de Rochambeau, commanding the auxiliary troops of his most Christian majesty in America, and his excellency the Count de Grasse, commanding in chief the naval army of France in Chesapeake;" and

Whereas that resolution has not been carried into effect, and the pledge of the nation made nearly one hundred years ago remains yet unfulfilled; and

Whereas it is eminently proper that the centennial anniversary of the decisive victory achieved by Washington and the continental army, with the assistance of their French allies, at Yorktown, should be appropriately celebrated by the American people on the spot where it occurred: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of thirteen be appointed by the Speaker, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the expediency of appropriating a suitable sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in erecting at Yorktown, in Virginia, the monument referred to in the aforesaid resolution of Congress, and of making the necessary arrangements, in conjunction with the authorities of the State of Virginia, for an appropriate celebration by the American people on the 19th day of October, 1881, for the surrender of the British forces under Lord Cornwallis; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FRYE. Under the rules the resolution would go to a committee.

The SPEAKER. It can be adopted by unanimous consent; otherwise, under the rule, it would be referred to a committee, and would come back within one week.

Mr. HUNTON. I will say to my friend from Maine the object of the resolution is to get the correspondence only so far as compatible with the interests of the public service.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR AT LAKE CHARLES, LOUISIANA.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Lake Charles, Calcasieu Parish, Louisiana, with power to enter and clear all vessels coming to that port.

Mr. HUBBELL. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. That should go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ACKLEN. This bill has been before the Committee on Commerce and has already been favorably acted upon by that committee. I have been authorized by a unanimous report of the committee to present this bill to this House for action. It is necessary that it should be acted upon promptly. A deputy collector at that port is very much needed at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman present this as a report from the committee?

Mr. ACKLEN. I have been authorized to report it, but I desire to ask unanimous consent at this time to have it acted upon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not understand exactly what the gentleman said. Does he report this as from his committee?

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is the gentleman authorized to report it now?

Mr. ACKLEN. I have been authorized by the unanimous action of the Committee on Commerce to report this bill in its present form.

Mr. GARFIELD. When did the committee authorize the reporting of this bill?

Mr. ACKLEN. At the extra session.

Mr. GARFIELD. If gentlemen around me who belong to the Committee on Commerce see no objection to this bill, I suppose I ought not to raise one. These gentlemen know about the matter; I do not.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose that even as a report from a committee this bill could not come in during the first six days of the session.

The SPEAKER. That point would not operate against the bill; but its consideration requires unanimous consent because reports from committees are not in order at this time. The six-day rule, however, would not apply against reports from committees, if made during the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. The bill is subject, at any rate, to a point of order, as it creates a new office and authorizes a new salary. I would like an opportunity to examine the bill. I do not know but that it may be right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objects to the consideration of the bill. That is his right.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays. I do not know why we might not as well work now as next summer.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers of Payne, James & Co., be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

I ask leave to present a supplementary petition of the same parties, stating some additional facts and praying that the prayer of the original petition be granted.

The order was agreed to; and the additional papers were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Henry Page, of Arkansas, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. JONES, of Florida, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mrs. Ellen C. Long be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

DOCUMENTS FOR MEMBERS OF THE PRESS.

Mr. MORGAN (by request) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the Senate document-room be directed to furnish each member of the press whose name appears in the Congressional Directory as the duly authorized representative of a daily newspaper with one copy of every bill, resolution, and document printed for the use of the Senate.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON REMOVAL OF NORTHERN CHEYENNES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the clerk to the select committee to examine into the circumstances connected with the removal of the Northern Cheyenne Indians from the Sioux reservation to the Indian Territory, authorized by resolution of the Senate of the 3d instant, be paid by the Secretary of the Senate out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the resolution will be read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it the resolution is only intended to run during the present session.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is all, of course. The committee is limited to the present session.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But I notice the resolution does not specify the fact that it is limited to this session. I have no objection to the resolution, but think it proper that it should be limited to the present session.

Mr. ALLISON. Insert the words "during the session."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the words "during the session" ought to be inserted.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let it be so amended. The resolution authorizing the committee fixes its existence for the session, and of course it follows that the pay of the clerk expires with the session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so amended if there be no objection.

The resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish the Senate a tabulated statement showing, by States, the total amounts paid for each fiscal year from 1866 to 1879, inclusive, for claims growing out of the late war.

If there is no objection, I ask its immediate consideration. If Senators prefer, I would just as soon have it go over and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that one or two Senators near me have some amendments to offer, and I ask that the resolution be printed and that it lie on the table, to give Senators an opportunity to prepare amendments to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and laid on the table.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. EATON submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence between this Government and any foreign government since February, 1869, respecting a ship-canal across the isthmus between North America and South America, together with copies of any project of treaties respecting the same which the Department of State may have proposed or submitted since that date to any foreign power or its diplomatic representative.

FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. CARPENTER submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Whereas the resumption of specie payments, the circulation of gold, silver, and greenbacks as lawful money of the United States under existing laws, and the reasonable expectation that the present condition of the finances of the country will not be disturbed by precipitate legislation, have been followed by restoration of business confidence, revival of all the industries of the country, and the inauguration of general prosperity; and

Whereas stability of financial policy is essential to the successful conduct of business affairs: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate any legislation during the present session of Congress materially changing the existing system of finance would be inexpedient.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at twelve o'clock and forty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTRA PAY OF CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce, for action at the present time, a joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to those members of the Capitol police who did duty at the time of the passage of joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to pay the employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual roll one month's extra pay," one month's extra pay at the same compensation as then paid them by law; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman whether this comes from the Committee of Accounts?

Mr. DUNNELL. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Georgia——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] asks unanimous consent to make a statement, the right to object to the resolution being reserved. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. DUNNELL. At the last session of Congress a joint resolution was passed, approved July 1, 1879, giving one month's extra pay to the employés of the House. Before making any further remarks I will ask that this joint resolution be read so that the fitness of the proposition which I now submit may be more clearly seen.

The Clerk read as follows:

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 19.]

Joint resolution to pay the employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual roll one month's extra pay.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the employés of the House borne on the annual roll, one month's extra pay at the same compensation as now paid them by law, and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Approved July 1, 1879.

Mr. DUNNELL. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that I opposed the passage of the resolution just read; but it was passed, and all the employés of the House were paid under its provisions except the members of the police force. Now, this simply makes equal the pay of these employés of the House to that which the other employés were paid under that resolution. I insist the police officers of the House are just as much the employés of the House as the clerks or messengers or other employés who were paid under that resolution. And I think it unjust, although I do not question the propriety of the decision made by the Clerk of the House that under that resolution he could not pay the police force, yet I think it is but simple justice to this branch of the service of the House that they shall be paid equally with the others. The resolution I offer has for its purpose to do equal justice to all employés of the House, and I trust there will be no objection to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the gentleman from Georgia, if he understands my proposition, will not object to its adoption at this time.

Mr. WARNER. It ought to go to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. This requires unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Ohio object, unless it goes to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. DUNNELL. I consent, then, that the resolution be so referred.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 128) was introduced, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Accounts.

RAILROAD MONOPOLIES, ETC.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to present a memorial and to ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know the nature of the memorial and do not wish to make any captious objection, but it is only right I should state to the House that if we begin reading memorials not privileged to be read we may have all the memorials and petitions presented to the House spread upon the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That is the object the gentleman has so far as the present memorial is concerned. It will now be read so the House may understand what it is, and when read the gentleman from South Carolina asks that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GARFIELD. If read now it will go into the RECORD by virtue of having been read in the open House. If it does not come under the rule as being from the Legislature of a State or from some body whose petition or memorial is entitled to go into the RECORD, I shall have to object.

Mr. AIKEN. It does not come from the Legislature of a State, but it does come from a body equally competent to present petitions here, and one which appeals very seldom to this House for any help or aid. It comes from an association of men who have formed and organized a corporate body known as the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry of America; and in their name I am instructed to ask this body to have that petition printed in the RECORD. It will not occupy two squares in the columns of the RECORD.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has this been to the gentleman's committee? Is the gentleman chairman of the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. AIKEN. It has not been presented to the Committee on Agriculture, nor is it asked that it should go before that committee; but it is asked that it shall be printed in the RECORD. It does not come from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask, then, that the petition be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I made the objection, not knowing what the paper was; but now that its object has been stated, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was advised of the nature of the proposition when he asked the House for unanimous consent.

Mr. AIKEN. I believe I have now the unanimous consent to present the petition.

The SPEAKER. There is no further objection, and the paper will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry, assembled in annual session at Canandaigua, New York, do most respectfully and earnestly call your attention to the following grievances, from which we pray for relief from your honorable bodies:

First. The transportation companies engaged in the interstate commerce of the United States have so far exceeded their chartered rights and franchises that to-day their management is without exception illegal and arbitrary.

Second. The frequent and unreasonable fluctuations in their rates of transportation, both of freight and passengers, are whimsical and unnecessary.

Third. Railroads are common carriers, built by the people for the common weal, and should not be tolerated as arbitrary and crushing monopolies.

Fourth. Organized combination among these transportation companies destroys the possibility of legitimate competition and oppresses the industrial classes of our country.

Fifth. These monopolies, annually growing more powerful and defiant, have not been and are not restrained by effective congressional legislation.

Your memorialists would therefore urge upon your honorable bodies the enactment of such laws as will relieve a burdened and oppressed people from these unlawful exactions.

Done under the seal of the order, by instructions from the National Grange.

J. J. WOODMAN, Michigan,
HENRY JAMES, Indiana,
WILLIAM G. WAYNE, New York,
D. WYATT AIKEN, South Carolina,
Executive Committee.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. SPEER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

REFRIGERATING SHIP.

Mr. GOODE. I ask, by unanimous consent, to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this body as soon as practicable a detailed statement of all action and proceedings taken by the National Board of Health under or in connection with "an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the purchase or construction of a refrigerating ship for the disinfection of vessels and cargoes, and for other purposes," approved April 18, 1879, together with all action and proceedings of the board of engineer officers appointed to examine and report upon the plan submitted, with copies of all papers relating thereto, and the reasons why no contract has been made for the purchase or construction of a refrigerating ship as provided for by the said act.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, what committee has charge of that subject?

Mr. GOODE. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan the resolution merely asks for information which it is important the Committee on Epidemic Diseases should have.

Mr. CONGER. This will require a good deal of copying and other labor. Let the committee take the subject under consideration, and if they shall report to this House the fact that the committee does desire to have this information, then we can adopt the resolution.

Mr. GOODE. I have no objection to that course being taken.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Origin, Introduction, and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases in the United States.

GERMAIN H. MASON.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2499) for the relief of Germain H. Mason, of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up and distributing the annual message of the President of the United States to the several committees of the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, in the chair.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report from that committee the resolution which is now in the hands of the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message and the accompanying documents as relates to funding the public debt, to the sinking fund, to the public finances, and to the tariff be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

That so much as relates to the Washington Monument and to the affairs of the District of Columbia be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILLITS. I move to amend the resolution by providing that so much of the message as relates to the question of polygamy in the Territory of Utah be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The practice has always been to refer to the Committee on the Territories all questions relating to the Territories, and there are but two Territories referred to in the President's message, Utah and Alaska. I have no special wish on the subject myself; I am merely acting as the organ of the committee, but I believe the resolution is correct in that regard.

Mr. WILLITS. It may be very proper, Mr. Chairman, to refer to the Committee on the Territories all questions in regard to the organization of Territories. But here is a question which has nothing to do with the organization of a Territory as such. It is a question, in my opinion, which ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee, especially when we look at the way in which the question is presented to us by the message of the President.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that this is entirely a legal question. It does not relate at all to ordinary territorial matters but has to do with the whole judicial system of the country. I think the gentleman from New York had better allow the amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am compelled to say that in one regard I differ entirely from both the gentlemen who have spoken. I believe the question of polygamy in Utah is one directly connected with the local legislation of that Territory, and that the power of the Federal Government, while in a political sense it extends to the Territories, does not extend to any religious or social question or custom. I am entirely indifferent, however, as to what reference may be made of that portion of the message, and will accept the change proposed by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. GARFIELD. All right.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. WILLITS, it was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the committee rise and report the resolution, as amended, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the President's annual message, and had directed him to report a resolution relating to the distribution thereof.

The resolution reported by the committee was read.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the resolution be adopted.

The question being taken, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. As there appears to be no further business I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he agree to that motion.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. To-morrow is private bill day, and there are a great many reports to be made. I desire that an opportunity should be given for making those reports.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn over, there were—ayes 113, noes 48.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 21 voting therefor, not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the motion to adjourn over was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair desires to present certain executive communications.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to consider the joint resolution at the present time.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than members of Congress" shall be filled by the reappointment of Asa Gray, of Massachusetts; Henry Coppeé, of Pennsylvania; John Maclean, of New Jersey; and Peter Parker, of the city of Washington, whose terms have expired.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will state the reasons for the passage of this resolution. Before the annual meeting of the Regents of the Institution shall take place in January, the term of office of these four persons will expire, and they are to be reappointed by resolution of the House and Senate. If we take a recess, as we probably shall before the board will convene, it will be destitute of these four Regents. I take it there can be no opposition to the reappointment of these four gentlemen, who have rendered eminent and distinguished service to the Institution. I believe the reappointment meets the concurrence of all the Regents as well as of Professor Baird.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PONCA INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any, and what, legislation is necessary to enable the Ponca Indians to prosecute, in the courts of the United States, their claim to lands under treaties and statutes of the United States, and report by bill or otherwise.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I ask my colleague to incorporate in that a resolution which I had proposed to offer, directing the select committee on the removal of the Northern Cheyennes to inquire into the circumstances of the removal of the Ponca Indians, and whether they are not entitled to be restored to their lands.

Mr. DAWES. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I will put it in writing, Mr. President.

The amendment having been reduced to writing was agreed to, and the resolution as amended adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any, and what, legislation is necessary to enable the Ponca Indians to prosecute in the courts of the United States their claim to lands under treaties and statutes of the United States, and report by bill or otherwise.

Resolved further, That the special committee on the removal of the Northern Cheyennes be instructed to ascertain and report the circumstances of the removal of the Ponca Indians from their reservation, and whether said Indians are not entitled to be restored thereto.

UTE INDIANS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence, by letters or telegrams, between the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and N. C. Meeker, late Indian agent at White River agency, since the 1st day of January, 1879; and also copies of all correspondence, by letters or telegrams, between the said Secretary of the Interior, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and General Hatch, General Adams, the governor of Colorado, and Special Agent Pollock, of and concerning the Ute Indians in Colorado.

MINING CAMPS ON UTE RESERVATION.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his report to the Secretary of the Interior, for the year 1879, uses the following language: "For thus intruding upon white settlements the Indians could easily find justification by pointing to the numerous mining camps which have been located on their reservation in direct violation of treaty provisions, namely: 'The United States now solemnly agrees that no persons except those herein authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employés of the Government as may be authorized to enter upon Indian reservations in discharge of duties enjoined by law, shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described in this article, except as herein otherwise provided.' This was also expressly reaffirmed in what is known as the Brunot agreement of 1873. This infraction of the treaty greatly irritated the Utes, and was undoubtedly one of the causes which eventually led to active hostilities:" Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what number of mining camps have been located on the Ute Indian reservation in Colorado; when and at what points such mining camps have been located; what efforts, if any, have been made to remove such mining camps, and whether such camps are now in existence, or were in existence on the 1st day of September, 1879; and that he transmit to the Senate all correspondence of and concerning the location and continuance of such mining camps on said reservation.

THE CURRENCY.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following preamble and resolutions, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Whereas the restoration of silver money to the lawful currency of the country, by act of Congress of February 28, 1878, was demanded with singular unanimity by the American people, and is now sustained by the public interests and by the full force of an intelligent public opinion; and

Whereas by the act of May 31, 1878, the circulation of United States legal-tender notes, commonly known as greenbacks, was fixed at the amount then in existence, to wit, $346,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury was prohibited from reducing it below that amount by any process or upon any pretext whatever; and

Whereas the aforesaid United States legal-tender note or greenback circulation, having been accepted by the Government for custom duties, became at once, and is now, equal in value to gold, and in certain transactions at a premium over both the precious metals; and

Whereas these financial measures, forced upon the present Administration, and adopted by Congress over its most strenuous opposition, have restored the confidence of the business world in the character, the amount, and the stability of the money of this country, thereby creating a general revival of trade and of business prosperity: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound astonishment and deep regret the proposition of the President of the United States in his recent annual message, and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to inaugurate a new and uncalled-for financial agitation, with a view to the destruction of the most necessary currencies now in use in the hands of the people.

Resolved, As the sense of the Senate, that such an agitation is detrimental to the public interests, calculated to unsettle all values, confuse and disturb business, shake public and private confidence, and that it calls for immediate and unqualified condemnation.

Resolved, That the true interests of the country require the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver on conditions of exact equality; and that it is the part of a wise financial policy to maintain the United States legal-tender-note-circulation, commonly known as greenbacks, in volume, not less than now exists, and to preserve its legal-tender quality unrestricted as to amount, and unimpaired in legal effect.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BECK, it was Ordered, That Warren Mitchell be authorized to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in regard to his claim, after leaving copies thereof in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, there having been an adverse report thereon.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D., as follows:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, it hath pleased Thee once more in Thy mysterious providence to remove from our midst one of the members of this House, in the prime of life and usefulness. O God, our Father, teach us so to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Truly our life is as the grass that withereth in a day, and as the flower of the field it passeth away. May we, the living, lay this lesson to heart, and fear Thy name, O God, and keep Thy commandments; and so live as to glorify Thee in this present life, that we may have the happy assurance of eternal life hereafter.

We invoke Thy blessing upon the officers and the members of this House. O God, direct them and keep them. And bless our country, and its Chief Magistrate, and rulers of all degrees, and people of all classes and sections and interests.

And these and all blessings we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of Thursday last was then read and approved.

DEATH OF HON. A. M. LAY.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce to the House of Representatives that my colleague, Mr. A. M. LAY, died this morning at the National Hotel, in this city.

It is not my purpose at this time to speak as the love I bore my late colleague would prompt me to do. At some future time I will invite the House to consider some resolutions in that regard. I now move the adoption of the resolutions I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a special joint committee of seven Members and three Senators be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral and to escort the remains of the deceased to his late residence in Missouri, and all necessary expenses attending the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of this House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I offered a few days ago a resolution calling for certain information from the Treasury Department. I move that it be taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, on the 3d instant:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish the Senate a tabulated statement showing by States the total amounts paid for each fiscal year from 1866 to 1879, inclusive, for claims growing out of the late war.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out of the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-six" the last figure "six," and insert "four," so as to read "from 1864 to 1879, inclusive."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the resolution read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what is the object of this resolution. It will involve a great deal of expense, but of course there can be no theoretic objection to obtaining any kind of information that anybody wants, if there is any value in it——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator allow me to say, as the mover of the resolution, that I should like to hear what he says? I should be glad to hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is as badly off in respect of me as I am in respect of the resolution—we cannot understand each other. I was saying that of course there is no theoretic objection to obtaining any information upon any possible subject, because information is valuable even to the Senate—we do not possess it all yet, I suppose—but the expense of eliminating items of one State from another by States, (which would cover the Army and Navy expenses and everything else, I suppose,) will necessarily be very large. It may be that the value of the information will justify the expense; but if we are to have it at all, it appears to me that we ought to have it from the beginning of the war, from 1861, so that the whole relations of expense to the various States—which appears to be the point of the resolution—may be seen, instead of cutting it off as from the end of the war. If this merely means private claims under acts of Congress, then, of course, there would be found very few cases comparatively before the end of the war, but there were many of all sorts nevertheless, during the period of the war—claims under contracts; claims for transportation; claims for quartermaster stores; claims for damages to property taken for forts, and so on. If then the information be of sufficient value to warrant the expense of getting it, the call ought to be for all that information so that one report, in order that we shall not do it over again, will cover the whole subject of the expenses of the war. I shall be glad to see it myself, I confess, but it would be very expensive to obtain.

I wish to move, therefore, if this resolution is to pass, to so change the date as to include the period of time from the beginning of the rebellion down to the present time. I presume the Senator would have no objection to that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment is already pending, offered by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] to strike out "1866" and insert "1864."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It will be noticed that the original resolution as introduced commences at 1866, and is intended to cover what are known as private claims. It has nothing to do with the expenses of the war for transportation and other such things as the Senator from Vermont has named, which were all closed up, or nearly so, at that time. The writer of the resolution intentionally avoided going further back than 1866, fearing that it would involve a great deal of labor to report all claims during the war.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the resolution, if I may inquire, refer merely to private claims?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is the intention. The intention of the resolution is to ascertain the amount of claims paid, separating the aggregates for the various States by States. It will be noticed that it is the total amount for each State which is called for; it is not the individual claims. The resolution so reads. It is not to name any person or any number of claims. There may have been five hundred claims; but the total amount is made up for each fiscal year, as I understand. It has to be made up for each fiscal year, and furnishing that information, I apprehend, will give very little trouble, and perhaps not cover in print as much as one side of a sheet of paper. The intention is to ascertain the facts. There has been a great deal said about the amount of claims that have been paid growing out of the war, their dates running along from about 1870, or later, up to the present time. The intention of the resolution is to ascertain the facts as to each year, that we may know how much was paid.

I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, except that it will give a great deal of labor to go through all the accounts during the war, because in many cases the expenses of transportation and other things will have to be separated from the total expenses of the War Department. It is well known that the accounts during the war were kept, necessarily, more in a lump than they have been since. There has been much more system since 1866 or 1864 than there was during the war, from the necessity of the case, and great allowance should be made for it. It makes no difference to me how far you go back, but it will impose a great deal of labor on the Treasury Department, as I understand, to require it to state the claims paid during the war.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the resolution. It asks for a tabulated statement by States of the claims growing out of the war. I do not know whether the Senator means "by States" the residence of the person who makes the claim, or the States in which the claim originated, and the cause of the claim. If the sole purpose of the resolution is to ascertain exactly where the residence of the person making the claim is, it seems to me a trifle of no sort of consequence, but in what State and for what cause the claim originated may be an interesting item in statistics and very valuable and instructive. To publish in a tabulated statement what particular State the individual who makes a claim happens to reside in, does not seem to have any instruction in it at all. What the claim was, and out of what it grew, and therefore upon what ground it is made upon the Government, I see is full of instruction; but the claimant may reside to-day in one State and to-morrow in another. Whether the author of the resolution desires to know in what State the claimant happened to reside when the claim accrued, or in what State he happened to reside when he made the claim, or in what State he happens to reside now, when the resolution is offered, does not seem to be expressed in the resolution itself. I would like to know just whether the anxiety for information is as to where the claimant resides now who made a particular claim upon the Government growing out of the war, or as to where he happened to reside when the claim arose, or whether the anxiety is to know as to the character of the claim, the cause out of which it grew, and the justice of the claim upon the Government. The latter has some instruction in it of value; but where the claimant has happened to choose, during the fifteen years that have transpired since the war, to take up his abode, does not seem to me to have any valuable information in it. I should like to have the author of the resolution more specific in regard to the information that is to be obtained.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it that the residence of the claimant was made known at the time the claim was made, and I do not see how the Senator can construe the resolution in any other way. Wherever the person receiving the claim resided at the time he received it I judge would be his residence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia what is the point of this resolution in the respect that he refers to? Of what use to us in legislation will it be to ascertain that there have been paid to citizens of the State of Vermont $10,000 since the so-called late war, and to citizens of West Virginia $15,000, and so on? If, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, we are to have a statistical history of these claims, which will show their nature and source and all that, it would be interesting undoubtedly, and it might be very cheerful reading; but I confess I do not see the economic advantage to the public of separating by States the aggregates of the sums that have been paid; for that is what the Senator now says he wants, not names of cases but aggregates apportioned among the States, as if it were a dividend that had been made that ought to be equalized in some way. Although of course I do not suspect the Senator from West Virginia of any such thing, it may be that somebody who drew this resolution, as I understood the Senator to say he did not——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, I beg pardon. It may be, then, if somebody else had drawn the resolution (it cannot be possible the Senator from West Virginia had any such idea in his mind) that he would be glad to have for what are called stumping purposes on some future occasion the means of saying, "why, it appears from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that the State of Vermont has got $10,000 and the State of West Virginia has only got $5,000;" and to state possibly still further "there is a great cry about the danger of the allowance of claims against this Government, and here is the proof to show that only a very small sum, a few millions of dollars have been allowed." Possibly it may be a part of the duty of Congress to furnish stump material of that kind, but I did not know it. For any legislative purpose, as I said, I do not see the value of this information in this form. If it be for the purpose of understanding the nature, the sort of claims that we have allowed, how far we have been imposed upon or have committed errors, then what the Senator from Massachusetts says has a great deal of weight.

But, Mr. President, I am not one of those who are opposed to obtaining any kind of information that the Senate is willing to have the people pay the expense of getting. Now the Senator from West Virginia appears to be willing to charge the Treasury with this expense, be it much or little; but if we are to have the information at all I think we ought to have it all. Therefore I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Missouri so as to make it read instead of "1864," "the 4th day of March, 1861."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I shall not oppose the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. I think that probably the information which will come will be useful. I should not oppose an amendment, if one were offered, such as was suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. I think with him that it would be instructive to know just to whom, and when, and under what circumstances some of the claims were paid; but the Senator from Massachusetts has made no motion to amend, and I shall not cumber the resolution any further.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator from West Virginia consent to insert "private claims?"

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to say a word. It has been suggested by Senators—and perhaps it would be well to have it so—that "private claims" should be inserted. The intention was not to include the necessary expenses of the war. Nothing of that kind was thought of by the mover of the resolution, but it was to embrace "claims" in the proper sense of the word.

Mr. ALLISON. Arising out of the war?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Arising out of the late war and by the war. The resolution so states.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. To insert "private claims" would make it much more distinct.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There has been objection made to naming the States. My friends on the other side appear to be very sensitive about "the States." Apparently they do not want the information so as to know what States have received claims. One of the Senators talks about stump material. It is more than possible that that has been talked of on the stump by my friends on the other side of the Chamber. I should not have referred to that, but my friend from Vermont reminded me of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope there is nothing wrong about it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should not be surprised if my friends on the other side would prefer that this information should not come officially to the Senate and the country, but that it should rest just where it is now, for them to suppose and talk as they choose. It appears to me that it would be very little trouble, indeed, to furnish this information by States, and from the dates that the mover of the resolution intended. My own idea is that a clerk in a day perhaps could compile the information, because it is by fiscal years, and all he would have to do would be to take the summary at the end of each fiscal year; but as amended by my friends on the other side it may require some considerable labor.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first dispose of the amendment moved by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] as amended. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator from West Virginia mean to say that the propriety of passing upon claims here in this body depends at all upon the State in which the claimant happens to reside at the time the claim is made? Does he propose to institute any such sort of rule as that hereafter in the Senate, that the inquiry is to be from what State the claimant comes, or is he to address himself to the merits of the claim? Suppose it should turn out that the State of West Virginia should be found upon this tabulated statement to have a very undue share of the claimants who had presented claims and had them allowed, does he mean to say that ought to have a feather's weight in determining hereafter upon a claim that might come from West Virginia? What, then, can be the purpose of ascertaining just what may be the State of residence at this moment or at the time when a claim has been presented of the claimant? My friend from West Virginia seems to be more anxious to ascertain where a man resided who presented his claim than to ascertain the merits of the claim itself. I do not know any other reason which has been urged for the passage of this resolution that leads to any other conclusion than that; and it passes my comprehension.

If there is to be a new rule established and the first inquiry that goes to the Committee on Claims or any other tribunal passing upon the merits of a claim is, what State did this man come from, the Senator of course in his frankness (and no Senator's frankness equals that of the Senator from West Virginia) will declare to the Senate that hereafter such a rule as that is to be established. I never thought myself of inquiring whence came a claimant. I have some anxiety at some times in inquiring as to the merits of the claim itself.

I wish the Senator would so shape his resolution of inquiry as to give us some information as to the nature and character of the vast claims upon the Treasury which have been allowed during this time. I care little whether they came from the State of West Virginia or from the State of Massachusetts. There does not occur to me now the residence of a solitary claimant. My friend has had some anxiety aroused in his breast about the residence of a claimant, and none thus far expressed as to the character of the claim itself. I press upon the Senator, whether it may seem to him to be worth considering at all or not, that this hunt after the residence of the claimant is valueless compared with the character of the claim itself.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to hear the amendment of the Senator from Vermont read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out "1864" and insert "March 4, 1861;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish the Senate a tabulated statement showing by States the total amounts paid for each fiscal year from March 4, 1861, to 1879, inclusive, for claims growing out of the late war.

Mr. CONKLING. "Private claims" the mover was willing to put in, I understand.

Mr. GARLAND. I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont that I think the proper amendment would be to date the call from the time that there was actual war. If I understand the resolution correctly, it calls for a statement of claims growing out of the war. There was no war on the 4th of March, 1861. I have not the statutes by me now, but I know what the Supreme Court has decided as to the time when war legally commenced. The proclamation of President Lincoln calling out troops bears date April 15, 1861. Then on the 19th of April, 1861, he issued a proclamation declaring the ports of certain States to be blockaded; and on the 29th of April, 1861, he issued a proclamation extending the state of blockade to the ports of the other seceded States. Then came the act of Congress of July 13, 1861, authorizing the President to interdict all trade and commerce between the adhering and the seceded States. Putting these together, with the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Protector, 12 Wallace, and in Brown vs. Hyatt, 15 Wallace, it is clear that the war commenced in legal contemplation either on the 19th or on the 27th of April, 1861, as the case may have been; and the act of July 13, 1861, so recognized the existence of a state of war.

I am not opposed to the purpose of the Senator from Vermont if I understand it, for I think with him that we ought to go as far back as possible and get all the information there is, if any is needed on this subject at all, so as to cover the whole period of time. So I would suggest an amendment to the effect that it go back to the time of the actual beginning of the war. The Senate will recollect that there was no war on the 4th of March, 1861, and there was not any actual demonstration of war until probably about the middle of April. I am favorable to the proposition of getting information as far back as the period of time which was the beginning of the war, and I would suggest the fixing of that time accurately as the date which should be embraced in the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no special objection to that, only it would be more convenient to begin perhaps at the beginning of an administration. But I do not remember any act of Congress which recognized a state of war in the public sense at all; Congress took a different view of it. I suppose the Senator's point is really to have the information beginning at the time actual hostilities, by whatever name they were called, commenced. I think the first proclamation of President Lincoln was on the 15th of April, 1861; and if it is more agreeable to Senators I have no objection to saying "the 15th of April" instead of "March 4th." It will not make any essential difference for the reason that the number of claims between, if there were any, growing out of a state of disturbance would have been very trifling indeed. As I say, if it is more agreeable I have no objection to changing the date to the 15th of April, 1861.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to inserting "the 15th of April, 1861."

Mr. EDMUNDS. It rather strikes me on reflection that this resolution, instead of being limited to private claims, ought for valuable public objects, as far as there is any value in it at all, to cover, by States, all expenses, public as well as private, that were paid out of the Treasury of the United States. It would be a very interesting public document hereafter to have grouped together year by year the total expenses of the so-called late war, so that those who pay the taxes and those who make the laws can see how heavy are the burdens, aside from those of life and society and misery and sorrow, that follow from events of the kind referred to in this resolution. It would be very instructive indeed, and I hope the Senator from West Virginia will so modify his resolution as to have from the Secretary of the Treasury—he says it is all made up by fiscal years and can be very easily done, and I take that for granted; I believe he has been in the Treasury now for three or four years looking over the books—such information as will enable us to see at a glance in this tabulated statement how much to the 1st of July, 1861, the total expenditure was, public and private, and so to July 1, 1862, and 1863, and 1864, and 1865, and since. I suggest to the Senator that while we are about it we had better cover the whole subject and have it all together.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, has the morning hour expired?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has. The resolution goes over.

Mr. CONKLING. That will give us time to perfect this resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think we can dispose of it now.

Mr. CONKLING. I think another day would be better.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. An amendment has been suggested covering private claims. Has that been inserted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now let the Secretary read the resolution, so that we can understand what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution may be reported if there be no objection; but the morning hour has expired, and the Chair understands the Senator from New York as objecting to its further consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not like to object; but I think it had better lie over, so that we may look at it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator if there is any other business?

Mr. CONKLING. There is the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is the regular order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is on the calendar of resolutions to be considered during the morning hour.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It will only take a moment.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Is there anything before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The calendar of general orders is before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at one o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

No. 2769) to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, so as to extend it to the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Galveston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BOEHM BROTHERS.

Mr. BLISS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2770) to refund duplicate taxes to Boehm Brothers, of New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am instructed, Mr. Speaker, to report from the Committee of Ways and Means a resolution fixing the adjournment over the Christmas holidays.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE BILL.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will not press that until I can have an opportunity to ask the House for an order to reprint a bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not object to that, if the gentleman has unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, Mr. Speaker, to ask the House to make an order that the bill known as the interstate-commerce bill shall be reprinted, and that double the usual number of copies shall be printed for the use of the members of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to report back from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 2408) to regulate immigration, and to move that the bill and accompanying report be ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

SOLDIERS OF THE BLACK HAWK WARS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to present a memorial to Congress in reference to the soldiers of the Black Hawk war, in order that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITE. What is it about?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is in relation to pensions for soldiers who served in the Black Hawk war.

Mr. WHITE. Does it relate to any other subject?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is simply a memorial of the Black Hawk war soldiers themselves.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the printing of the memorial in the RECORD?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

The survivors of the Black Hawk Indian war who escaped with their fire-locks held an adjourned meeting October 2, 1879, at the court-house, Springfield, Illinois, there being some twenty-four of the old Indian trailers present.

The meeting was called to order by the president, L. D. Masters, of Petersburgh, who took occasion in a few remarks to refer to the struggles of the early pioneers of that day in driving from the borders of Illinois the renowned Indian Black Hawk and his warriors.

The secretary, General John A. McClernand, then read the minutes of the meetings held on January 8 and June 12. He also informed those present that he had corresponded with numerous survivors of that memorable war, now residents of the different Western States, with a view of collecting facts in relation to the companies and regiments to which they belong, which would be necessary in case Congress should see fit to place them on the pension-rolls.

A request was then made that those who were not in attendance at the former meetings come forward and have their names recorded by the secretary.

In response the following were enrolled:

Andrew W. Tice, Jacksonville; age, sixty-six.
Colonel Williams, Springfield; age, seventy-one.
I. B. Williams, New City, Sangamon County; age, sixty-nine.
Robert P. Langley, Taylorville; age, sixty-seven.
George Power, Cantrall, Sangamon County; age, eighty-two.
Uriah Allen, Sharpsburgh, Christian County; age, seventy.

Colonel Dick Taylor, of Chicago, chairman of the committee to draft a memorial to Congress, asking that body to recognize and place upon the pension-roll the few remaining survivors, reported the following; which was unanimously adopted by the meeting:

"On behalf of ourselves and other survivors of the Indian war traditionally known as the Black Hawk war we respectfully submit the following memorial:

"Our members are scanty, and some of us are tottering upon the verge of the grave. A few more days or months, or years at most, must end the mortal career of all of us.

"We belong to the early class of pioneers whose youth preceded the era of common schools, now brought to the homes of the generations that have grown up in our sight. Necessity made us men of action rather than of the learning of schools. We have played our part in the wilderness and in the presence of those dangers which are incident to early settlements. Our knowledge, such as it is, comes of the book of nature and stern experience. Our language, therefore, must be void of ornament and literary attractions. Our only habit and care is to speak plainly and truthfully.

"Great changes have transpired in our midst. Many of us knew Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Arkansas, and a considerable portion of Missouri when those regions were a howling wilderness. Some of us knew Illinois in her territorial form, and when her population was mainly confined to the district bounded by the Kaskaskia and Ohio Rivers, and scarcely exceeded forty thousand; when savage tribes roamed over the central and northern portions of the now State of Illinois; when the imperial domain of Illinois was the home of ferocious beasts; when her rivers were hardly otherwise disturbed than by the wild goose and wild duck.

"How great the revolution! Capital, art, and enterprise have been sleeplessly busy. The shores of our rivers are crowded with stirring cities and towns. A great city has sprung up on our lake border which has laid its giant hands upon the commerce of the world and challenges the wonder of mankind. Green fields and golden harvests have succeeded to the rank grass and gloomy forests which once held undisputed sway from Cairo to Fort Dearborn. Schools, colleges, and universities glisten upon the fair bosom of the Prairie State as diamonds upon the fair bosom of the blushing virgin. All this we have seen; in all this we have taken an humble but willing part. We have seen still more. We have seen a mighty civil war shake the land; armies marshaled in deadly strife, and nations looking on aghast. In this lamentable war those of us who were still able for the service of the fiery field took part for the Union, while the rest, in their constrained retirement, sympathized with its cause.

"Happily the Union survives, and peace, with its halcyoned wings, is returned to soothe the happiness of excited and belligerent men. Thanks for this. May liberty, union, fraternity, and peace remain forever.

"Our object is not to ask what you in duty cannot grant, but crave of you to extend to us that equality which is equity. Some of us are bowed down by years and infirmity. Some of us are unable to provide for ourselves. Again, some of the widows of our dead comrades are destitute of what is due and necessary to old and helpless age. Both we and they are few in numbers. We pray that you will put such of us as we have mentioned on the pension-roll, and thus smooth their short road to the dark river which, when once crossed, is never recrossed."

A committee, composed of Messrs. Constant, Major Stuart, and Judge Solomon, was appointed to see that a copy of the records of the Black Hawk war was obtained from the Department at Washington, with a view of obtaining the company and regiment to which each member had belonged.

Several addresses were made by the members present, and the meeting then adjourned, to convene on the first Thursday in October, 1880, unless they should be called together in the mean time by the president and secretary.

SOLDIERS' UNION OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WILSON. I hope there will be no objection to my presenting at this time a joint resolution and asking for its passage.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not yield for any proposition which does not come in by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON. If I do not get unanimous consent for the introduction and passage of the joint resolution, I will withdraw it or have it referred to a committee.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. What is it about?

Mr. WILSON. Congress granted condemned bronze cannon to the Soldiers' Union of West Virginia; but, owing to some technical objection growing out of the phraseology of the bill, the Secretary of War did not feel authorized to deliver those cannon, and this joint resolution I offer is for the purpose of correcting that defect, and making the grant to the Soldiers' Union of West Virginia effectual. As gentlemen well know, the practice is common to grant condemned cannon to soldiers' cemeteries throughout the Union. Soldiers' unions everywhere have received the benefit of such grants of condemned cannon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of the joint resolution?

Mr. WILSON. It will not take a minute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, &c., That an act entitled "An act granting condemned bronze cannon to the Soldiers' Union of West Virginia," approved June 20, 1878, be construed to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish to the governor of West Virginia, for the use of the Soldiers' Union of that State, bronze condemned cannon belonging to the United States, to inclose the monument of that union in the city of Wheeling.

Mr. GARFIELD. It ought to be a bill and not a resolution; anything which appropriates property of the United States should be in the form of a bill.

Mr. WILSON. But this simply construes an act already passed. It does not appropriate any property of the United States.

Mr. GARFIELD. It needs a law to construe a law. If the law which this construes was passed as a joint resolution, then let this go as a joint resolution; but if it was a bill, then this should be put in the form of a bill.

The SPEAKER. In giving construction to a law already passed it has been usual to put it in the form of a joint resolution.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to changing the resolution to a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection.

Mr. WILSON then, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2771) to construe an act entitled "An act granting condemned bronze cannon to the Soldiers' Union, of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PRESENTATION OF MEMORIAL.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask, Mr. Speaker, to have a memorial asking for amendment of the patent laws read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GARFIELD. We had one read the other day, and I object. Let it go through the usual course.

Mr. AIKEN. It is the usual courtesy of the House, whenever a question is made, to have a memorial read. This comes from a body having a constituency four-fold larger than that of any legislator in America.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

ADJOURNMENT OVER HOLIDAYS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That when the two Houses adjourn on Tuesday, the 23d of December, 1879, they stand adjourned until twelve o'clock m. on Tuesday, January 6, 1880.

I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will yield to me to make a brief statement.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply desire to say that the Committee on Appropriations hope to be able to report during this week the pension, fortifications, and Military Academy bills, and to have them passed at least by Friday of next week, the 19th. If so, it is possible the Committee of Ways and Means may see proper to bring about an earlier adjournment—on Friday the 19th instead of the Tuesday following.

Mr. GARFIELD. We cannot hear the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was saying that the Committee on Appropriations hope that the House will have passed by the 19th instant the pension, fortifications, and Military Academy bills, which are the only bills the committee will be able to report before the adjournment. It is well known we had not the estimates and could not have them under the law until the first Monday of December. Therefore we will not be able to pass other appropriation bills before the adjournment. We may pass these by the 19th; and in that event it may be thought proper that we should adjourn on Friday, the 19th, instead of the following Tuesday, the 23d.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The committee in considering this question thought it was very desirable that both Houses should remain in session long enough to accomplish all the business possible. We shall be very glad, indeed, if those appropriation bills shall be reported and passed, as stated by the gentleman from Georgia. At the same time there are other bills upon which gentlemen desire action. I insist on the demand for the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. STEELE. Did the gentleman from New York call for the previous question before or after he made his remarks?

The SPEAKER. He called for the previous question immediately after having the resolution read.

Mr. STEELE. Is the resolution open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is if the previous question is not sustained.

Mr. STEELE. Other members of this House are quite as much entitled to be consulted upon matters of this kind as the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VANCE. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from New York that if we adjourn on the 23d many of us will not have time to get home and be with our families on Christmas Day. I hope the gentleman will at least agree to change the date in the resolution to the 22d.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is nothing in the resolution that will prevent any gentleman, on his own individual responsibility, leaving before the date specified. But because there are gentlemen who want a little longer time to get home that is no good reason why the rest of us should not remain here and work as long as we can. I must therefore insist on the demand for the previous question on my resolution.

The question being put on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 56, noes 116.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think we might as well have the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that the yeas and nays cannot be called on this question. The House has refused to second the demand for the previous question, and the resolution is now, therefore, open to amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 23 voting therefor, not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the previous question was not seconded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is recognized.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I would like the gentlemen who oppose the resolution in its present form to state some other day which would be more acceptable.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to amend the resolution by providing that Congress shall assemble on the 2d of January.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was in hopes it would be agreeable to the gentleman from New York to let this matter be referred back to the Committee of Ways and Means, so that in again reporting it they might have the advantage of seeing what was the condition of business in the House. If the gentleman from New York does not agree to that course, I move to amend by striking out "Tuesday, the 23d," and inserting in lieu thereof "Friday, the 19th."

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say one word before the question is taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia. I shall at the proper time offer an amendment, not changing the day proposed in the resolution for adjournment, but providing that we shall meet again on the 2d of January. In reference to the amendment proposed by my friend from Georgia, I wish to say that there are many of us who are at such a distance from our homes that we cannot well go to them during the holidays. During the recess we are left here at considerable expense, and gentlemen are not here to join us in committee labor. It is much better for us, it seems to me, to take only such time for the recess as is necessary for gentlemen who find it convenient to go home for the holidays, so that we may resume and finish our work as speedily as possible. It is better we should make a recess reasonably short, and get through our work at a season of the year when it is pleasant to work, than to have a prolongation of the session into the extreme heat of summer. For that reason I hope we will adjourn on the 23d, and, after the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia has been acted upon, I propose to offer an amendment that we meet again on the 2d of January.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas can offer that amendment after the present amendment is disposed of. The remedy of the gentleman would be to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia, and then offer the amendment he has indicated.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] rose a short time ago. For what purpose?

Mr. VANCE. I desired to offer the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question being taken on Mr. BLOUNT's amendment, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUBBELL. I would like to have the resolution reported again. I wish to know what it provides as to the House convening again.

The SPEAKER. The resolution as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means made the adjournment for the holidays extend from the 23d instant to the 6th of January. The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered, is to strike out "Tuesday, the 23d," and insert "Friday, the 19th."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 103, not voting 63; as follows:

During the call of the roll, the following announcements were made:

Mr. COVERT. I desire to state that Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi, is necessarily absent from the House on a committee.

Mr. SAWYER. My colleague, Mr. FROST, is paired with Mr. DICK, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARMER. My colleague, Mr. A. HERR SMITH, is paired with Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My colleague, Mr. ATKINS, is detained from the House by illness, and I understand is paired with Mr. BAKER, of Indiana.

Mr. HAYES. My colleague, Mr. HAWK, is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to further amend the concurrent resolution by striking out the word "sixth" and inserting the word "second" as the day in January when Congress is to meet again.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UTE OUTBREAK.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs investigate and report to this House the origin of the recent outbreak of the Utes at the White River agency, in Colorado, and to this end that said committee be authorized to send for persons and papers.

INTERNATIONAL REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported the following; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Whereas by the act of June 21, 1879, the sum of $20,000 was appropriated "for negotiations with foreign governments, with a view to the international remonetization of silver."

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to inform the House what action, if any, has been taken, and what progress made, to secure the co-operation of other governments with the United States in the full remonetization of silver, and to furnish copies of instructions given to our ministers abroad, and of communications from any of such ministers or from foreign governments in relation thereto, so far as not inconsistent with the public interest.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate joint resolution No. 50, filling existing vacancies in the Board of Regents in the Smithsonian Institution.

The joint resolution provides that the existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than members of Congress shall be filled by the reappointment of Asa Gray, of Massachusetts; Henry Coppee, of Pennsylvania; John Maclean, of New Jersey, and Peter Parker, of the city of Washington, whose terms have expired.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think there will be no objection to the passage of that joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPREME COURT REPORTS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering House bill No. 1493, defining the duties of the reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports.

Mr. FINLEY. Is that the bill on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is, and first on the Calendar in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will state that the object of the bill is to enable the people of the United States to obtain the Supreme Court Reports at $1.50 a volume, instead of $5 a volume as now.

The motion of Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering House bill No. 1493, defining the duties of reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That said reporter shall, when required by the said Supreme Court of the United States, attend its sessions and consultations, and, under its direction, report and prepare for publication its decisions, and such other decisions as it may designate.

SEC. 2. That it shall cause to be reported, with as much brevity as practicable, its decisions, whether made in the disposing of a motion or otherwise, that determines any theretofore unsettled or new and important, or modifies any theretofore settled, question of law, or that gives construction to any statute of the United States, or of any State or Territory, or of any treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation or Indian tribe, together with such other of its decisions as may be deemed of public interest and importance.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said reporter, immediately after the decision of any case to be reported, to prepare for publication a report thereof, under the direction and supervision of said court, and in general conformity with the plan hitherto adopted and pursued, and when he shall have so prepared a sufficient number of decisions to form a volume of the size of the volumes of said reports known as "Wallace's Reports," he shall also prepare an index and table of contents of said volume, and deliver the said reports with said index and table of contents to the Public Printer, who shall cause the same to be printed with all reasonable dispatch: Provided, That no argument of counsel shall be published with said report, other than a brief of the points made and the authorities cited and relied upon by said counsel, unless specially ordered by said court.

SEC. 4. That said Public Printer shall cause said reports to be printed upon good white paper, and bound in law leather, in style not inferior to said "Wallace's Reports," and shall deliver 300 copies thereof to the Secretary of the Interior, to be by him distributed as provided for by law, and the remainder he shall sell to such persons as may desire to purchase the same at a price not exceeding 10 per cent. in addition to the cost of printing and binding said reports: Provided, No person shall be permitted to purchase said reports for resale, unless he shall give bond in the penal sum of not less than $1,000 to the United States, to be approved by the judge of any United States court, with good and sufficient security, that he will not sell the same at a greater price than the cost of printing and binding, with 25 per cent. thereof added.

SEC. 5. Said Public Printer shall publish an edition of 2,000 copies of each volume of said reports, and when said edition is exhausted, as aforesaid, a second edition of 1,000 copies, or larger, if the demand for the same makes it necessary.

SEC. 6. Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $4,500 when his reports of said decisions shall constitute but one volume, and an additional sum of $500 when there is printed and published more than one volume per year; but said salary shall only be paid when he causes said decisions to be delivered as aforesaid to said Public Printer.

SEC. 7. That sections 681 and 682 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in the last Congress this bill met the unanimous approbation of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I was then directed to report it, but no opportunity was offered. At the last session of the present Congress the bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I will explain the principal changes which the bill makes in the present law; and I desire the attention of the committee, because most of the members are lawyers, and when they understand this measure will appreciate the necessity of its passage.

The Revised Statutes, section 681, at present provide that—

The reporter shall cause the decisions of the Supreme Court made during his office to be printed and published within eight months after they are made; and, within the same time, shall deliver three hundred copies of the volumes of said reports to the Secretary of the Interior. And he shall, in any year when he is so directed by the court, cause to be printed and published a second volume of said decisions, of which he shall deliver, in like manner and time, three hundred copies.

I desire to call attention specially to the following provision:

SEC. 682. The reporter shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury an annual salary of $2,500 when his report of said decisions constitutes one volume, and an additional sum of $1,500, when, by direction of the court, he causes to be printed and published, in any year, a second volume. But said salary and compensation, respectively, shall be paid only when he causes such decisions to be printed, published, and delivered within the time and in the manner prescribed by law, and upon the condition that the volumes of said reports shall be sold by him to the public for a price not exceeding $5 a volume.

Now, the committee will observe that the section which I have just read allows the reporter a salary of $4,000, and besides gives him virtually the copyright of the reports. He, and he alone, has the right to sell them, the only condition being that the price shall not exceed $5 per volume.

I am informed by the publisher of Wallace's Reports that under the pending bill the reports can be printed, published, and bound in a style equal in every respect to Wallace's Reports, and can be sold to the public for $1.50 a volume. This gentleman knows the cost of publication, for he was the contractor with the Supreme Court reporter for the publication of these volumes. He had them published, I believe, by Little & Brown, or some other firm. He got his pay; the publishers obtained theirs; and the Supreme Court reporter received the balance.

The present system of publishing these reports constitutes a monopoly which ought not to be recognized by the Government. The reporter of the Supreme Court ought not to be allowed to let out the publication of these reports. The matter is one which the Government ought to take into its own hands. We all know the importance of giving to the country cheap legal literature. We know that the land is full of young lawyers, who are not able to pay the exorbitant price of $5 a volume for Supreme Court Reports. I doubt not gentlemen will all remember that last spring when this bill was introduced Wallace's Reports went down to $3 a volume. I recollect finding upon my desk a printed notice of Morrison & Company that they would thereafter sell Wallace's Reports for $3 a volume.

Now, the bill before the Committee of the Whole proposes to give the reporter of the Supreme Court a salary of $5,000—a salary equal to that received by members of Congress. I think this salary is ample in every respect; it gives the reporter adequate compensation.

The bill further provides against resale of these volumes at exorbitant prices. It requires that every bookseller purchasing these volumes for the purpose of resale shall give bond and security, with a penalty of $1,000, that he will not sell the books at a price exceeding 20 per cent. advance upon what he pays, so that if he pays $1.50 or $1.60 per volume, the books will not cost the profession throughout the country more than $1.75 or $1.80 per volume. This is a consideration which I think ought to weigh with members of this House. The furnishing of these reports cheaply is now a desideratum. Before the war, when there was not so much litigation in the Supreme Court, it was not so important; but now no lawyer's library is complete without the decisions of the Supreme Court. Under the present system we are paying to the publisher and the reporter unnecessarily large sums, thereby requiring members of the legal profession to pay the present exorbitant prices for these reports.

This bill provides that the reports shall be sold by the Public Printer at a price not exceeding 10 per cent. advance upon the cost of printing and binding, thus fully protecting the interests of the Government.

Mr. MORSE. How much does the reporter now receive?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Four thousand dollars, and the perquisites derived from the contract with the publishers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How much are those perquisites?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not know. Sometimes, I am told, they amount to six, seven, or eight thousand dollars. There is no censure to be attached to the reporter in this matter; he only receives what the present law entitles him to receive; but I say the law is wrong and ought to be changed. I hope it will be the pleasure of the committee to pass this bill.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] a question or two; because, from the hasty reading of the bill, I could not gather all that is in it. Is it precisely the same bill authorized to be reported to the House by the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think it is the same bill, without the crossing of a t or the dotting of an i; I am sure it is the bill which my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] favored during the last Congress.

Mr. FRYE. Does the bill contain a provision requiring the style of paper, printing, and binding to be kept up to the present style of the Supreme Court Reports?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I read from the fourth section of the bill:

That said Public Printer shall cause said reports to be printed upon good white paper, and bound in law leather, in style not inferior to said "Wallace's Reports."

Mr. FRYE. What is the salary fixed by the bill for the reporter?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. FRYE. Did not the Judiciary Committee agree to fix the salary at $4,000?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am not advised about that; but I think not. The provision of the present bill in regard to salary is this:

Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $4,500 when his reports of said decisions shall constitute but one volume, and an additional sum of $500 when there is printed and published more than one volume per year.

We know there will be two volumes in the future as there have been in the past; and therefore it will be $5,000 if there are two volumes, and $4,500 if there is but one volume a year.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Certainly, sir.

Mr. LAPHAM. As the language now stands in the bill it is ambiguous. I move to insert between the word "published" and the word "more" the words "two or;" so it will read "published two or more volumes a year."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the wording of the bill is not such as rather to induce an increase of the number of volumes, offering, as it were, a sort of premium to make the number greater? It seems to me anything that would lead to including in these reports unimportant decisions, and thus swelling the number of volumes, would be rather against than in favor of good legislation. I think there is sense in what Carlyle said once, "that the golden age of literature would be when men were paid for what they did not write," and I am inclined to believe that the golden age of law reporting will be when men are paid for a large part of what they did not put into these reports. [Laughter.] I make the suggestion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My friend from Ohio has not read the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know it; I am only making this suggestion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The law says he shall do it under the direction and supervision of the Supreme Court. Now, does the gentleman from Ohio think that the Supreme Court of the United States, in order to give $500 a volume to the reporter, will consent to the publication of an unnecessary number of reports? The reporter has no power to report except under and by direction of the Supreme Court.

Mr. FRYE. And there is a further limitation in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, sir; there is another provision in the bill, that no argument of counsel shall be published with the report other than a brief of the points made and the authorities cited and relied upon by said counsel, unless specially ordered by the court.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Virginia will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia, if I heard the reading of the bill correctly, where it is made obligatory on the Public Printer to make the binding of these books equal to the binding of Wallace's Reports. The only thing required is in respect to the paper, that they should be on good white paper, but nothing is required in respect to the typographical execution of the work. If I am correct in my hearing of the bill, that is the true construction of it; and I suggest whether or not the bill ought not to be so amended as to require not only the paper but the typographical execution as well as the binding to be equal to Wallace's Reports.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The words of the bill are that they shall be published in a style not inferior to Wallace's Reports, which includes every requisite to make a volume as good as Wallace's Reports.

Mr. BAKER. May I trouble the gentleman to read that portion of the bill which speaks in reference to white paper?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The bill provides that the Public Printer shall cause said reports to be printed on good white paper. That is distinctly provided for. Then they are to be bound in law leather, and to be of a style not inferior to Wallace's Reports.

Mr. BAKER. Exactly. Now, Mr. Chairman, that provision in reference to the style refers back to the question of binding, and I suggest that the language of the bill be amended so as to provide that these reports shall be printed on white paper and in type, as well as binding, in no way inferior to Wallace's Reports.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is, that they should be equal in press-work?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir; in press-work, paper, as well as binding. I move to amend by inserting "paper, press-work, and binding" after the words "style and type not inferior to Wallace's Reports."

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think that will answer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Press-work should be included.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Connecticut frame an amendment, and I will accept it. He is much more familiar with printers' terms than I am.

Mr. BAKER. I think the word "typography" is a better one: "paper, typography, and binding."

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. According to the suggestion of my friend from Connecticut, who is familiar with terms used by printers, I move that the language of the bill be amended, so as to read, "that said Public Printer shall cause said reports to be published, in paper, press-work, and binding, in a style not inferior to Wallace's Reports."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to ask of the gentleman in charge of this bill why it is that Wallace's Reports are taken as the standard, and not the present series of Otto's Reports? It must be known to the gentleman from Virginia as well as other members of the House who are lawyers that a volume of Otto's contains about one hundred pages more than a volume of Wallace's; and by mere inspection of the press-work, paper, and binding any gentleman will discover that Otto's Report is a decidedly superior work in execution and preparation.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I accept Otto as an amendment to Wallace. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. It is a good suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. If he takes Otto as a standard, which is the best book, I have nothing further to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment should be made in two places.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be made wherever the change is necessary.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope my friend will not interrupt the harmony of the committee with any new amendment, and from the look of the manuscript which he has before him he has entirely too much.

Mr. TALBOTT. No, sir; I propose to strike out all after the word "report," in line 9, to the word "added," in line 15; and my reason for that is this: It is there provided that no person shall be permitted to purchase said reports for resale, unless he shall give bond in the penal sum of not less than $1,000 to the United States, to be approved by the judge of any United States court. It often happens that a person may want to deal in a hundred or may be in five volumes of these reports. Now, is it right that such a man should not be permitted to deal in a few volumes of United States reports without first filing with the United States judge a bond in the penal sum of $1,000? That is what I object to in this bill. I do not believe it is right, I do not believe it is just, I do not believe it is proper that any man shall be called upon to give a bond before he can buy or sell any book published under like circumstances in this country.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I insist on my motion that the committee rise and report the bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. I insist upon my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, if pressed, will be to leave the bill in Committee of the Whole. The bill, under the rules of the House, must be first considered by sections, and if he moves that the committee rise, the bill will be left in committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Is it not within the power of the committee by a majority vote to dispense with the reading of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by the committee rising and going into the House and there suspending the rules.

Mr. FINLEY. Let me make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to inquire whether it is in order, when the bill has been read by sections, to offer a substitute for the bill as it is now before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to offer a substitute, after the bill has been read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order for the gentleman from Ohio to move his substitute now, if he wishes to do so, but the committee must first proceed to consider the bill by sections before the question can be put upon striking out and inserting.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to be heard for a few moments on my substitute whenever it is proper. I ask that my substitute be read at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

That said reporter shall, when required by the said Supreme Court of the United States, attend its sessions and consultations, and, under its direction, report and prepare for publication its decisions, and such other decisions as it may designate.

SEC. 2. That it shall cause to be reported, with as much brevity as practicable, its decisions, whether made in the disposing of a motion or otherwise, that determines any theretofore unsettled or new and important, or modifies any theretofore settled, question of law, or that gives construction to any statute of the United States, or of any State or Territory, or of any treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation or Indian tribe, together with such other of its decisions as may be deemed of public interest and importance.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said reporter, immediately after the decision of any case to be reported, to prepare for publication a report thereof, under the direction and supervision of said court, and in general conformity with the plan hitherto adopted and pursued, and when he shall have so prepared a sufficient number of decisions to form a volume of the size of the volumes of said reports known as "Wallace's Reports" he shall also prepare an index and table of contents of said volume, and cause said reports to be published in all respects as provided in sections 681 and 682 of the Revised Statutes, except that so much of section 682 as reads as follows, to wit: "That the volumes of said reports shall be sold by him to the public for a price not exceeding $5 per volume," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "That the volumes of said report shall be sold by him to the public at a price not exceeding $3 per volume."

Mr. FINLEY. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the pending bill, and to insert as a substitute what has just been read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be considered as pending, but under the rules of the House the original bill must first be considered by sections.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it in order to move to strike out "Wallace" and insert "Otto" in the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is not now before the House. The Clerk will read the first section of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That said reporter shall, when required by the said Supreme Court of the United States, attend its sessions and consultations, and, under its direction, report and prepare for publication its decisions, and such other decisions as it may designate.

No amendment was offered.

The second section was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall cause to be reported, with as much brevity as practicable, its decisions, whether made in the disposing of a motion or otherwise, that determines any theretofore unsettled or new and important, or modifies any theretofore settled, question of law, or that gives construction to any statute of the United States, or of any State or Territory, or of any treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation or Indian tribe, together with such other of its decisions as may be deemed of public interest and importance.

Mr. HOUK. I move after the word "tribe," in line 8, to insert the words "and none other."

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out these words:

Whether made in the disposing of a motion or otherwise, that determines any theretofore unsettled or new and important, or modifies any theretofore settled, question of law, or that gives construction to any statute of the United States, or of any State or Territory, or of any treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation or Indian tribe, together with such other of its decisions as may be deemed of public interest and importance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word in regard to that amendment. The law as it is, as I understand it, leaves such decisions to be reported as the Supreme Court shall direct. This proposition changes that law by the insertion of the words just read, the effect of which will be to require reports to be made on certain subjects—and who is to judge of those subjects? The question is as to—

A motion or otherwise that determines any theretofore unsettled or new and important, or modifies any theretofore settled, question of law.

Now, who is to determine that? The court or the reporter? Then it concludes with this clause:

Together with such other of its decisions as may be deemed of public interest and importance.

I submit this undertakes to change existing law, but practically makes no change whatever except that it leaves the question open to confusion instead of making the law as specific as it now exists. I therefore move to amend by striking out these words, so as to leave the matter to be controlled by the court.

Mr. REED. I do not undertake to say whether this is a change of the law or not; but if it is a change, it is certainly a change for the better. The tendency in all our American reports is to size rather than to anything else, and all the efforts which we have been making to cheapen reports have only resulted in making the library necessary for a lawyer more expensive than it would have been if the matter had been left to the natural law of supply and demand, instead of the States attempting to help out the provision made. I believe we would be better off to-day if there was no State assistance given in regard to reports. We should have more law and less padding. And I think that now it would be a good idea to abolish this whole matter of a reporter of the Supreme Court, and let persons as a matter of enterprise of their own make the reports. We should then have a selection of cases got up on better principles. But if we are going to have the cases published by the Government, and there can be such a thing as a limitation upon them to cases where new matters of law are decided, for Heaven's sake make that limitation. There is no danger that under that law we shall not get enough into the reports. The judges would have sufficient affection for the work of their own hands to use all reasonable diligence to get it into the reports. I believe if there can be any restriction to this thing it is a good idea to apply it.

The question being taken on Mr. WHITE'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read section 3, as amended, as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said reporter, immediately after the decision of any case to be reported, to prepare for publication a report thereof, under the direction and supervision of said court, and in general conformity with the plan hitherto adopted and pursued; and when he shall have so prepared a sufficient number of decisions to form a volume of the size of the volumes of said reports, known as "Otto's Reports," he shall also prepare an index and table of contents of said volume, and deliver the said reports, with said index and table of contents, to the Public Printer, who shall cause the same to be printed with all reasonable dispatch: Provided, That no argument of counsel shall be published with said report other than a brief of the points made and the authorities cited and relied upon by said counsel, unless specially ordered by said court.

The Clerk read section 4, as amended, as follows:

SEC. 4. That said Public Printer shall cause said reports to be published in paper, press-work, binding, and style not inferior to said Otto's Reports, and shall deliver three hundred copies thereof to the Secretary of the Interior, to be by him distributed as provided for by law, and the remainder he shall sell to such persons as may desire to purchase the same at a price not exceeding 10 per cent. in addition to the cost of printing and binding said reports: Provided, No person shall be permitted to purchase said reports for resale, unless he shall give bond in the penal sum of not less than $1,000 to the United States, to be approved by the judge of any United States court, with good and sufficient security, that he will not sell the same at a greater price than the cost of printing and binding, with 25 per cent. thereof added.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] suggests a further amendment to this section in the line of that already adopted. It is to insert after the word "paper" in the amendment the word "type," so that it will read, "published in paper, type, press-work, binding, and style." I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALBOTT. I renew my amendment to strike out all after the word "reports," in line 9, to the word "added," inclusive, in line 15. I ask the Clerk to read the words proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, No person shall be permitted to purchase said reports for resale unless he shall give bond in the penal sum of not less than $1,000 to the United States, to be approved by the judge of any United States court, with good and sufficient security, that he will not sell the same at a greater price than the cost of printing and binding, with 25 per cent. thereof added.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will state my reason for offering that amendment. I do not think that Congress ought to impose the obligation upon any person to file a bond in $1,000 before he can buy a few copies of the United States Supreme Court Reports for sale. Anybody who wants them can go to the Public Printer and can buy them. They get on the market and are for sale. Twenty-five per cent. is a very small profit for any person to make, if you take into consideration the length of time they would probably have to be kept on hand and the cost of transportation to the point where the copies may be deposited for sale. I am satisfied in my own mind this is not just legislation. These reports should be open for purchase and sale, and the man who is able to bond should be on no better footing than the man who is not able to bond.

I hope the amendment I have offered will be adopted by the committee. Anybody who wants the books can go and buy them at cost. If he does not, and if they get on the market, he takes his chance of getting them with the rest of the world. I submit, therefore, to the committee that that part of the section should be stricken out.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. In reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Maryland, I beg to suggest that the committee could not undertake to say who should buy these books. The bill therefore provides that after the Public Printer shall have delivered three hundred copies to the Secretary of the Interior—

The remainder he shall sell to such persons as may desire to purchase the same, at a price not exceeding 10 per cent. in addition to the cost of printing and binding said reports.

By this bill we limit the number to what we suppose the demand will be and allow anybody to purchase, but with a proviso. Without such a proviso a wholesale bookseller would buy up every book that is printed, and thus monopolize the trade, and the lawyers throughout the country would at last have to pay five or six dollars a volume instead of $5, as now. We therefore require every bookseller who proposes to sell these books to give bond that he will not sell at a greater profit than 25 per cent. This provision gives an ample profit to the bookseller, does no injustice to anybody, and prevents a monopoly being established in the sale of these books.

Mr. TALBOTT. The proviso says:

At a greater price than the cost of printing and binding, with 25 per cent. thereof added.

There is no allowance made for the transportation of the books.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Does he know that the Public Printer adds 15 per cent. above the actual cost price on every job of work that is done in the Government Printing Office?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. FINLEY. It has a great deal to do with this question. The gentleman said a moment ago that these books would be furnished at cost of labor and material, which would not exceed one dollar fifty cents a volume. Now if you can get at the cost, and if it be true that the Public Printer adds 15 per cent. to the actual cost price——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. What does he add it for?

Mr. FINLEY. He says he adds it for wear and tear of machinery.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Then you ought to have an investigating committee. You have one and can see to that. I cannot attend to the printing office; but I understand from the former publishers of this book, Morrison & Company, that the book will not cost over $1.50 a volume under this bill. And the Printer is authorized to sell to such persons as may desire to purchase these books at a price not exceeding 10 per cent. in addition to their cost. It is impossible for the House to define the cost of the printing and binding of these books. I am satisfied that the Public Printer will do what is right in the matter. If he is an honest man he will charge no more than the law allows; and if he does, then my friend can get up an investigating committee for him.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a remark on this provision, which, it seems to me, will fall entirely short of accomplishing what is aimed at if left in its present shape.

The difficulty is this: If the Public Printer publishes these books and sells them to a bookseller, say to the Morrisons, here in Washington, they may take them and sell them to the booksellers throughout the country for whatever price they may choose to ask; and then we who may want to buy the report will not be benefited. The committee have sought to restrict the purchaser for sale by providing that he shall not ask more than 25 per cent. profit. Now, how will that work? Suppose that the Public Printer shall sell to a bookseller the entire edition of this report, an edition of two thousand copies, and that bookseller gives the bond here required. Then he takes these two thousand copies and delivers them to the Morrisons, here in this city. What is to prevent them from charging whatever percentage of profit they may choose? Does anybody pretend that this provision will prevent the second purchaser, who has bought from another party, from selling these reports at whatever price he may choose to put upon them? He will not give any bond; he is not bound to the United States. He will simply go into the book store and purchase ten or twenty copies, and then sell them at $5 a copy if he chooses to ask that much and can get it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The language of the bill reaches every one.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is plain. If the Morrisons, or any one else, should so far violate the spirit of the law as to monopolize all these books, and hold them, without being bound by any bond, what is easier than for the Public Printer, under a resolution of Congress, to print so many thousand more copies, and so guard the printing as to throw all of Mr. Morrison's books on his hands and prevent him from reselling them at any high price?

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] is asking me a question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No, I am only showing that your objection is not a practical one. This bill provides that no man shall buy these reports for resale, whether from the Public Printer or from any one else, and charge more than 25 per cent profit. If he buys for resale he must give this bond. Under this bill we try to protect the people against booksellers and publishers. The bill is so guarded, I think, that there can be no fraud committed under it upon the public. Gentlemen more learned in the law than I am, and better acquainted with the operations of printing, binding, and publishing, have taken great care to perfect this clause of the bill, and I think it cannot be bettered now in this hasty manner.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman says the correction of the difficulty would be for Congress to give authority for printing another edition. But in the mean time the lawyers of the country will be waiting for their reports, unless they pay the exorbitant prices that may be asked for them.

I do not believe it is in the power of this Congress to provide that no man, no matter how far removed he may be from the Public Printer, shall buy one of these books, no matter if it has passed through twenty hands, and sell it for more than 25 per cent. profit.

There is a practical difficulty here which I think ought to be reached, but this proviso does not reach it. The suggestion made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] is a sound and pertinent one, in my opinion. It seems to me that this proviso should be carefully guarded; at present it does not cover the ground.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am willing to guard it, as well as any man can, to make it whatever may be needed. What amendment does the gentleman propose?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not prepared one.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Let my friend suggest an amendment that will make it more guarded and I will agree to it. Otherwise I must ask a vote on the provision.

Mr. ROBINSON. Provide that no person shall be permitted to purchase said reports from the Public Printer.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is not what the gentleman wants. Now, if you put this bill in operation you will not accomplish anything.

Mr. TALBOTT. There is no penalty proposed.

Mr. ROBINSON. No penalty at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon the pending amendment has expired.

Mr. TALBOTT. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. I renew it. The remark of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] respecting my having charge of an investigating committee is a very gratuitous remark. I have but this to say: If his bill will not bear discussion, if it needs the assistance of personal remarks of that kind——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Why, Mr. Chairman, there was nothing on earth further from my intention than to make any allusion to my distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY.] I was not thinking of saying anything unkind to him. I was thinking merely of his aptness and ability and experience as a printer, and I was certain that he would investigate this matter very well.

Mr. FINLEY. I thank the gentleman very kindly. I have this to say: Whatever my powers of investigation may be, I did in the course of an investigation in the Forty-fifth Congress obtain some insight into the manner in which the public printing was done; and I now say with all kindness to the gentleman from Virginia that I can see no reason why the Government must have the monopoly of printing the Supreme Court reports. By the provision of this bill we give to the Public Printer or the Government the entire monopoly of printing and distributing the Supreme Court reports, at a greater expense, as I could show, if I had time, than the present cost of the work. To begin with, the salary of the Supreme Court reporter is at present $2,500 a year; this bill proposes to make it $4,500. Is not that correct? Now by this bill we do not throw this work open to competition, but give the Public Printer the entire monopoly of the publication and sale.

The gentleman argues (and I believe it is the only argument he presented) that we should pass this bill in order that the Government may furnish to lawyers their law-books cheaply. It is not my duty as a legislator, according to my view, to act for the benefit of the lawyers of the United States. I am here to take care of the interests of the Government, and not to permit lawyers to get their books cheaply while the Government suffers. I can show by reports which I have before me—by reports of the Public Printer himself—that he has been in the habit of making exorbitant charges. By the report which I hold in my hand, and which I will make a part of my remarks, it appears that he charged the Patent Office $3.50 for binding Webster's Dictionary, and $7.50 for binding a volume much smaller than Webster's Dictionary; yet the binder swears that the binding for all the Departments is charged for at only 15 per cent. above the actual cost. The following table, taken from the books and reports of the Public Printer, shows the prices charged Departments for binding alone:

* Sets. † Per set.

Now, I want to know what is the gentleman's authority for saying that under this bill we shall get these books for $1.50 a volume. The binding alone, at the rate the Government binder has been charging, will amount on each volume to more than double that sum. You may look all through the Public Printer's reports, and you will find this statement sustained.

Now, why should we give to the Public Printer this monopoly, or why should the Government have it and pay an additional sum to the Supreme Court reporter for his services, when under the provisions of the law as it now stands the work can be done at a much less rate? The substitute which has been read embraces the first two sections of the committee's bill and the law as it now stands, with this modification:

That the books shall be furnished at a rate not exceeding $3 a volume, instead of $5, the price authorized by the existing law.

Under the present law the Secretary of the Interior is provided with 300 copies of these reports free of charge. I believe that is the provision on page 127 of the Revised Statutes; at any rate I know such is the practice, for I am informed on good authority that the Secretary of the Interior receives 300 copies of each volume free of charge. The $1,500 paid to the Supreme Court reporter for the second volume is covered by that item.

Mr. BAKER. I believe the gentleman who last addressed the committee has been making some observations touching the Public Printer.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] withdraw his formal amendment?

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw it.

Mr. BAKER. I propose to strike out the whole of the proviso and insert in lieu thereof these words:

Provided, That said Public Printer shall not be permitted to sell said reports for resale; nor shall he sell more than one copy of said reports to any one person or firm.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that there is any occasion for any limitation such as is contained in the proviso of this bill. I have no doubt at all that this matter will regulate itself. It seems to me that it is a very poor compliment to the intelligence of members of the bar in this country to suppose that when they are permitted, by simply making application to the Public Printer, to obtain copies of these reports at a price not exceeding 10 per cent. advance on the cost of production, they will not be able to protect themselves and their interests against the booksellers of the country. I think they will be entirely able to protect themselves in this regard. I believe, however, that the proviso of the bill furnishes no protection whatever against the wrong sought to be corrected. I do not believe it will at all protect the bar against the booksellers of the country in purchasing these volumes. The real remedy, it seems to me, is to make it obligatory upon the Public Printer, when there shall be a public demand equal to say one hundred copies or any other number that may be designated, to strike off an additional edition. If this were done, the public would be protected. This proviso would not prevent a man from purchasing these volumes and passing them through one, two, three, or half a dozen hands; and the ingenuity of American tradesmen will be equal to the occasion, so that the difficulty sought to be remedied will be utterly beyond the reach of this provision.

In addition to that, I do not believe it is within our power, or if within our power that it is a wise exercise of power on the part of Congress, to undertake to say that parties who purchase from the Government any article which the Government furnishes shall not be permitted to sell that article in open market for whatever price they may be able to obtain. It is interfering with the private business of private individuals in a manner that, for one, I am not willing to consent to. I do not think the injury sought to be remedied is sufficient to justify the invasion of the ordinary rights of a citizen in the transaction of his private business. I now withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. I concur with those who think the proviso to the fourth section should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BAYNE. But I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BAYNE. I move, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the last word. When I have the opportunity to do so, I give notice that I shall offer an amendment to the fifth section, which, I think, will obviate the difficulties which gentlemen suppose may be encountered under the circumstances by booksellers buying up the edition and selling copies afterward at an increased price.

I think that the proviso to the fourth section should be stricken out altogether, and that no limitation whatever should be placed upon the trade in these books, or in anything else which may be the subject of trade in this country. The amendment which I propose to offer to the fifth section at the proper time will read, "That said Public Printer shall publish an edition of two thousand copies of each volume of the said reports, and when said edition is exhausted, as aforesaid, a second edition of one hundred copies, or larger, and so on, as the demand for the same makes it necessary."

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman merely substitutes one hundred for a thousand.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir; and I insert the words "so on," so the Public Printer may accommodate the public demand. In the event of booksellers taking up the two thousand copies originally issued or printed, all that will be necessary will be for lawyers to apply to the Public Printer for a new edition, and he will be able, in compliance with this section, to supply that demand as it may arise. Thus any effort on the part of booksellers to monopolize this trade would be absolutely defeated without placing upon the trade any such restriction like that contained in this proviso to the fourth section. I withdraw the formal amendment to strike out the last word.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to strike out the last line of the pending section. It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, the whole difficulty grows out of the fact that we have uniformly given these reporters the exclusive right to publish the reports of the decisions of our courts. This has been given to these reporters as a part of the emoluments of their office. The only practical solution of the difficulty, in my judgment, is this——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I cannot hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE. I have said that the difficulty in all these matters of reporters has arisen from the fact that we have uniformly given reporters, as part of the emoluments of their office, the exclusive right to publish these reports and put them upon sale. The solution of the trouble, in my opinion, is this: We ought to pay the reporters a fixed compensation, and then provide that the Public Printer shall publish so many copies at cost as to supply the different departments of the Government, and no more than that, and then leave the market perfectly free to every book-publisher in the country to procure and publish these reports. Let there be competition. Let publishers publish these reports as they publish Robinson Crusoe, or anything else. If it were possible to amend the bill in that way I should be pleased to see it done, so as to give these reporters so much salary, which I believe is already provided for in this bill, and then to provide that the Public Printer shall print so many copies as ought to be distributed, and then allow anybody to publish as many copies as they please at whatever price they shall see fit. By this competition we should get these at what they are worth.

If the copyright be not given to the reporter of the Supreme Court, or this bill does not give the exclusive right to the Public Printer to publish them, I see no objection to the bill as it is——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It does not.

Mr. BROWNE. Except that I think there should be no restriction on the sale of these reports by the imposition of bonds upon vendors, or anything of that kind. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. TALBOTT.]

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the last word of the section. I only wish to say that the discussion indicates we have lost sight of one thing which is generally regarded in the publication of these reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court and of the decisions of the various State courts, and that is the evidence these reports furnish that they contain the law as adjudicated and are issued under proper authority. If there should be a private publication of these decisions of the Supreme Court, one not authorized by the court or under the law, that publication would not be accepted in any court as evidence of the law, as it could not be considered an official report. Hence, we must keep in view that which adds to our convenience and necessity in the administration of the law in the different courts. I suppose that is the theory upon which the various States as well as the Federal Government act in providing for the supervision of the printing of the decisions of State courts as well as the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. When so printed under proper supervision they come with the authority which is necessary that they contain the law as determined by the several courts.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. One word in reply to my friend from Ohio. He says this constitutes the Public Printer a monopoly. A monopoly, how? The Public Printer is an officer of the Government, paid a salary, and he can receive not one cent for any labor he performs, whether little or much, beyond that salary. He has no further control over the matter than to do as the law provides.

Mr. FINLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said that the Government would have the monopoly.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My friend says the Government would have the monopoly. The Government ought to have the right, as these reports are to be published under its authority, and the price should be fixed at a rate which would make them easily accessible to everybody.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition was drawn with great care by the committee, and guarded in every possible way. I believe that every attempt to amend it will only make it worse; and I hope, therefore, all amendments will be voted down by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. It is an amendment to the bill as reported. It strikes out all after the word "reports," in line 9, and inserts what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "reports," in line 9, and insert "and when transmitted by mail, express, or freight the cost of transportation; and said Public Printer shall not, by himself or through another, sell said reports at a greater price than hereinbefore prescribed."

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, the necessity for this proviso grows out of the fact that the Public Printer cannot sell to purchasers direct all over the country. The object of my amendment is to enable him to do so by adding the cost of freight or transportation to the original cost and the 10 per cent. That will bring these books within the range of every purchaser all over the Union at a reasonable rate, and will obviate the necessity, as I think, for the proviso altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, being an amendment to the text which is proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Maryland, is in order, and will be entertained at this time.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 20, noes 41; no further count being asked.

So the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. TALBOTT was then rejected.

The Clerk read the fifth section, as follows:

SEC. 5. Said Public Printer shall publish an edition of 2,000 copies of each volume of said reports, and when said edition is exhausted, as aforesaid, a second edition of 1,000 copies, or larger, if the demand for the same makes it necessary.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer an amendment to that section, so as to make it read as follows:

Said Public Printer shall publish an edition of 2,000 copies of each volume of said reports, and when said edition is exhausted as aforesaid, a second edition of 1,000 copies, or larger, and so on, as the demand for the same makes it necessary.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARBER. I move to add to the fifth section, after the word "necessary," as follows:

And it shall be the duty of said Public Printer to keep on hand for sale at all times, as nearly as may be, a supply of not less than 250 copies of each volume of said reports.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as prohibiting the publication of the reports by other publishers.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think that should be voted down.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 6 was then read, as follows:

SEC. 6. Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $4,500 when his reports of said decisions shall constitute but one volume, and an additional sum of $500 when there is printed and published two or more than one volume per year; but said salary shall only be paid when he causes said decisions to be delivered as aforesaid to said Public Printer.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to amend by striking out that section and in lieu of it inserting the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $4,000, and said salary shall only be paid when he causes said decisions to be delivered as aforesaid to said Public Printer.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The only change my amendment makes in the bill as reported is in the amount of the salary proposed to be paid. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] has stated that by this bill the salary paid by the Government to the reporter is $5,000 a year, instead of $2,500 a year. I have talked to several members of the committee, and, so far as I have been able to ascertain, there is no doubt that $4,000 will insure us the most efficient service, or service as efficient as can be procured. It ought to be our object to economize so far as we can in these matters. My amendment also guards against an objection urged against the bill in an interrogatory by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] when he asked if the effect of the bill would not be (when it provides in one contingency for a salary of $4,500 and in another contingency for a salary of $5,000) to cause a disposition on the part of the reporter to unnecessarily swell the number of the reports. I say that is guarded against by my amendment. I hope it will be adopted. It puts the salary at a figure that, it seems to me, is not exorbitant on the one hand nor penurious on the other, and I think it will give us satisfactory service.

Mr. FINLEY. I stated that under the law the salary of the reporter now is $2,500 a year. Now, understand me. For the first volume the salary of the reporter is $2,500 a year. He gets an additional sum for the second volume. But, mark you, under section 683 there is required to be furnished to the Secretary of the Interior three hundred volumes gratis. Now, take the price of the three hundred volumes, and you see that pays the cost of the additional salary; so that it really leaves now the salary of the reporter at $2,500 a year.

I concur in the amendment of my friend from Tennessee. I really think the salary should be less. This law has been in operation since 1842. Is there any reason why we should increase the salary of the reporter now from $2,500 a year to $4,500, when we do not increase his labors? Can any gentleman give me a reason for our doing so?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that it is only in order at this time to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FINLEY. Will it be in order to move an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I move to amend the amendment so as to make the amount $3,500.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me I desire to ask him a question. The present salary is $2,500 as has been stated, and the three hundred volumes furnished the Secretary of the Interior would cover the $1,500 extra. Does the gentleman from Ohio not know that the reporter now receives a large perquisite, or rather a large profit from the publisher on every volume? It is asserted that he receives somewhere in the neighborhood of $7,000 or $8,000 a year.

Mr. FINLEY. That does not cost the Government anything, does it? What, then, does it matter to us?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It costs the purchaser something.

Mr. FINLEY. We are here to represent the interests of the Government, and not the purchasers. It is no argument to say this reporter has made a profit on the work from somebody else; and if it were, that argument would hold good as to this second sale which the gentleman from Virginia was talking about some time ago. The question is, what is a fair salary for the reporter for the duties he performs? And until some gentleman can give me some reason why the salary of the reporter should be changed from $2,500 to $4,500, and in one contingency to $5,000, I insist we should get it down to a reasonable figure.

But, Mr. Chairman, in my humble judgment this bill as now reported by the committee is not for the best interests of the Government. I insist that by the Government taking the publication and sale of these books we shut out competition. Why should not the publication and sale of these reports be open to competition as every other business is? Why should the Government furnish all the material and pay an increased price to a reporter in order that the lawyers over the country may get their books cheaper? For that is the only argument I have heard—that lawyers might get their books cheaper.

A MEMBER. That is a good argument.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman says that is a good argument. It is a good argument to a lawyer who wants to sponge upon the Government. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down I want the House to understand what my substitute is. I have taken the bill of the gentleman from Virginia and copied it down to the word "reports" in line 8 of the third section. Then my bill strikes out all this machinery giving the publication to the Public Printer, and re-enacts the present law. It simply re-enacts the present law with an amendment making the price not to exceed $3 per volume. Now, I am willing that that should be made $2 a volume, or any price gentlemen wish that may be a reasonable price. That will leave the law as it now stands. It will furnish lawyers—if that is your argument—with these reports at a fair price, and it takes away all this machinery of allowing the Government to make this publication. Why, sir, the Public Printer, in order to publish these reports, will be compelled to keep on hand from year to year matter set up in type, and a quantity of expensive material, in order to publish these reports, to an amount not less than $2,000 a year at least.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My friend forgets that under the law as it now stands the reporter is given first $2,500 a year, and then $1,500 additional if more than one volume a year is published. It always has averaged two volumes a year, and therefore he gets the highest rate of compensation. In addition to that he gets a royalty from the publisher with whom he makes a contract, which swells his compensation to many thousands a year. The gentleman may say what he pleases about this being a bill for the benefit of lawyers. It is a bill for the benefit of the people, and is intended to take away from the reporter and publishers the exorbitant profit they now make, and to allow the people to have this book at the cost of its printing and binding, with 10 per cent. added.

This compensation which is fixed in the bill gives the reporter no profit at all upon the book; he derives no compensation from the sale of his books, although the other reporters may have obtained from ten to twelve thousand dollars a year, for all we know; I have no doubt the average has been from ten to twelve thousand dollars a year. We propose to strike that down, and to make a fixed salary for the reporter of $4,500 a year, with $500 more should he have the additional labor of preparing a second volume. We think that compensation is not too much.

Mr. BROWNE. Allow me to make a suggestion. I think if the gentleman will consent that so much of this sixth section be stricken out as provides for an additional $500 of compensation in the event of the publication of two volumes of these reports in the same year, that will be satisfactory to this committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will state to this committee that the Committee on the Judiciary and also the Committee on the Revision of the Laws investigated this question carefully. This Supreme Court reporter must employ clerical help at his own expense. We did not think this compensation too much. I have no personal feeling in the matter; the committee can dispose of the question as it may see fit.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. This is next to the last section of the bill; I hope the committee will not rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no further discussion is in order until the two amendments now pending shall have been disposed of. Pending the consideration of those amendments, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] moves that the committee now rise.

Mr HARRIS, of Virginia. Let us finish this bill before we rise.

The question was taken upon the motion that the committee rise; and upon a division there were ayes 103.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I give it up.

Mr. CONGER. That is manly.

No further count being called for, the motion of Mr. WRIGHT was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1493) defining the duties of reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COX. I move that the House now adjourn.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF HON. A. M. LAY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the funeral services of the late member from Missouri, Mr. A. M. Lay, will take place this evening at 7.30 o'clock, at the National Hotel, in this city. The members of the House are invited to attend.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PIERCE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

D. M. HAMLIN.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House compensation at the legal rate to D. M. Hamlin for services performed during the month of July, 1879, as watchman on the Capitol police force, for which services he has not heretofore been paid.

ELECTION CONTESTS, RECORDS, ETC.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am directed unanimously by the Committee of Elections to report for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 50 copies of the printed notices of contests, records, and briefs in contested-election cases be bound for the use of the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state what will be the cost of this? Under the law, should any work of this kind cost more than $500, the resolution providing for it must first be considered by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think it can cost over $50. Twenty-five cents a copy would be the usual price; perhaps this may amount to $25.

The resolution was then adopted.

ADDITIONAL FORCE FOR PENSION BUREAU, ETC.

Mr. WAIT. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions inquire, and report to the House as early as practicable, what amount of additional force may be made immediately useful in the Pension Office, and in the office of the Adjutant-General and Surgeon-General, in advancing the settlement of pension claims, with an estimate of the expense of such force in each of said offices.

The House must be fully aware that for the last year there has been very great delay in obtaining replies from the Pension Bureau to the original applications for pensions and the payment of arrearages under the law of the last Congress. From careful inquiry, I have become satisfied that the delays, so far as the Commissioner and his assistants are concerned, are unavoidable. They have very much more work thrown upon them than they have time and physical ability to perform. I am confident that these delays result from the want of a sufficient clerical force, not only in the Pension Bureau, but in the offices of the Adjutant and Surgeon Generals. Such being the fact, Mr. Speaker, I look upon it as our imperative duty to remove this embarrassment at once by putting a sufficient number of clerks in these several offices to perform the work demanded by the greatly increased number of applications. I therefore offer this resolution, and with it a letter addressed to me by the Commissioner of Pensions in response to certain inquiries which I addressed him on the subject, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The letter is as follows:

The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

Your petitioners, citizens of the United States, respectfully ask that you will provide, by appropriate legislation, for the appointment by the President of the United States of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to public revenue and taxation, to crime, pauperism, the public health, morals, education, and the general welfare of the people; and also the results of license, restrictive and prohibitory legislation in the several States, and in the District of Columbia and the Territories.

HOLMAN AND FAIRBANKS.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (S. No. 618) for the relief of Herman Holman and Crawford Fairbanks, of the city of Terre Haute, Indiana, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend its adoption. In view of the character of the business to which it relates, I ask the Senate to proceed to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be reported at length.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment reported is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, required to adjust and settle the claims for deficiency tax assessed by said Commissioner against said Holman and Fairbanks, as distillers, for deficiencies which it is claimed occurred at their distillery in said city of Terre Haute during the months of October, 1878, and January, 1879, upon the following basis, to wit: Said Commissioner shall first ascertain the capacity that was actually used by said distillers during each of said months, which shall be determined by the tubs actually filled and emptied by them during each month. He shall then ascertain the actual amount of grain mashed by them during each of said months, and the yield of spirits per bushel from such grain for each month. He shall next ascertain whether any accidents which were unavoidable occurred during either or both of said months, in the breaking or destruction of machinery or in the scarcity of water at their distillery, which prevented or delayed them in the mashing of grain or in the filling or emptying of tubs at the proper time. If he shall find that any such accidents did occur he shall next ascertain the amount of loss that said distillers sustained thereby for each of said months. He shall next ascertain if said distillers fully accounted to the Government for all the spirits produced by them at their distillery during each of said months, and, if so, whether the amount so produced each month, after deducting from the capacity or amount charged against them all losses and detention sustained by accident as aforesaid, if any accidents occurred, was equal to 80 per cent. of the capacity actually used by them for each of said months; and if he shall so find, he shall then abate the assessments, in whole or in part, made against said distillers for said months, which are as follows: For the month of October, a sum not exceeding $13,198.50; and for the month of January, a sum not exceeding $5,795.06; and no assessment for deficiency tax for these months shall be made against them, except as herein provided. But if said Commissioner shall find that said distillers did not make 80 per cent. of the capacity used by them during each of said months, after making the proper deductions for accidents as aforesaid, if any occurred, during either or both of said months, then he shall change the assessments made for said months so as to conform them to the amount of deficiency that he shall find due against them for each of said months; and they shall then be assessed by him for the amounts of deficiency so found due against them for each month, and not otherwise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware, reporting this bill from the Committee on Finance, asks for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire if there is a written report in this case?

Mr. BAYARD. I was about to state that there is a report, concurred in by the entire committee, which I can have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CONKLING. I think we might hear the report read and reserve an objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read, and then objections called for.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, this day submitted by Mr. BAYARD from the Committee on Finance:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 618) for the relief of Herman Holman and Crawford Fairbanks, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The memorial of Messrs. Holman and Fairbanks, distillers, of Terre Haute, Indiana, sets forth at some length the particulars of their business during the period (October, 1878, and January, 1879) in which the tax now complained of was levied on them for deficiencies in production.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has been heard before the committee in reply, and the report of his trusted and expert subordinate has also been laid before the committee.

The statements of the petitioners and of the Commissioner do not materially vary, and the important fact is conceded and established to the satisfaction of the committee that all lawful taxes have, in fact, been fully paid by Messrs. Holman and Fairbanks on all the spirits actually distilled by them, including the period of the alleged deficiency.

But the Commissioner is fully sustained by your committee in his construction and administration of the law as he finds it on the statute-book, and which compels him to assess and collect tax upon the registered capacity of the distillery.

The facts disclosed, however, warrant your committee in recommending an abatement of the tax so assessed for discrepancy between registered capacity on actual production, because of the unavoidable accidents to the machinery, which despite every endeavor on their part, reduced their actual production and yet prevented the distillers giving that formal and immediate notice of temporary reduction in their registered capacity of distillation, which was required by law.

On the conceded ground that no fraud was intended and none committed, but that the petitioners conducting an extended business and have a long record of honesty and good citizenship accorded them, your committee report the accompanying bill for their relief, and recommend its prompt passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to ask one question about this claim, not wishing to object to it, and with no knowledge of it. Is it a case in which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any other official violated the law, or was the law observed?

Mr. BAYARD. I will state the case precisely. Taxes were assessed upon the registered capacity of this distillery; but, owing to breakage in the machinery of the distillers, which by no care could they remedy, the actual production was less than the registered production. Of that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and his agents are fully satisfied, and have so stated to the committee, as the committee have stated in their report. But the law compelled the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to assess the tax according to the registered capacity of the distillery. In so doing the amount of tax which he levied was upon a greater amount of spirits than actually was produced, as he is satisfied. The discrepancy was caused by the impossibility of notifying him from time to time as the capacity of the distillery was in fact lessened, although the registration remained untouched.

The taxes were levied and assessed, and they will be collected unless this relief is given; and it should be given at once, because in January the taxes must be paid. It is for that reason that I think the Senate should proceed to give relief at once, because if it does not do it now it will be too late to do it at all. The whole committee are satisfied, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is satisfied, that every dollar has been paid to the Government by this large concern in all its history of business, (and I may here say that they pay millions of dollars annually to the internal revenue,) and this is merely to correct an error which has unavoidably occurred under the hardship of the law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 50) providing for filling existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Friday, the 19th of December, 1879, they stand adjourned until twelve o'clock on Tuesday, January 6, 1880; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2771) to construe an act entitled "An act granting condemned bronze cannon to the Soldiers' Union of West Virginia;" in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WAR CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate consider for the remainder of the morning hour the calendar of resolutions and concurrent resolutions?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which was under consideration yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, on the 3d instant, which, as heretofore amended, reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish the Senate a tabulated statement showing by States the total amounts paid for each fiscal year from the 15th of April, 1861, to 1879, inclusive, for private claims growing out of the late war.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, will the Senate agree to the resolution as amended?

Mr. MORRILL. I have an amendment that I desire to offer. I move to add to the resolution the following words:

And also a like statement of all such claims which have been presented to and rejected by the Treasury Department, or which may now be pending therein.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It appears to me that Senators want to load the resolution with different amendments so that the information sought cannot be obtained. What does the Secretary of the Treasury know about bills or claims pending before Congress? The resolution originally only embraced a time commencing one or two years after the expiration of the war. It was amended on the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] which was accepted by myself, so as to include all private claims that were allowed during the war. Now the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] wants to know what claims are pending and what have been rejected. It would probably take the Department a year to get up that information, and I do not know how many clerks it would require. Those claims have been disposed of, set aside and rejected. The original resolution only seeks to ascertain the total amounts that have been paid by fiscal years. Here are half a dozen bills passed by Congress, which I have before me, giving by States the very information that is asked for, or a part of it at least, and it is tabulated by States; the amount paid in each State being stated separately.

I have no wish to discuss this resolution, but I suggest to my friends on the other side that if they want further information they had better introduce a separate resolution and ask the Department for it, and not try to load down the resolution I have offered in order to prevent the information asked for being furnished to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, obviously the information asked for by the resolution is very curious and will receive a considerable amount of attention; but I think the information which I have proposed to call for as an amendment is even more curious and will attract greater attention. I am very anxious to see what claims have been presented and rejected, and also what may be now pending in the Department. I can conceive of no possible objection to adding what I have proposed to the resolution; and as we are after curious information, I hope my friend from West Virginia will at least gratify me by allowing this amendment to be added to his original resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 27.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Let the original resolution be read and also the amendment.

The resolution as amended, and the amendment proposed by Mr. MORRILL were read.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 33; as follows:

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate consider this morning the calendar of general orders?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the first bill on the Calendar, the bill (S. No. 349) for the relief of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, be indefinitely postponed. It has been twice read, and lies upon the table at my request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To this the Chair hears no objection; and that order will be entered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. A resolution has just come from the House fixing the time for the holiday recess.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was not agreed to.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDONALD. Was there not a motion pending to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion was voted down, and the yeas and nays are ordered on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to send the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations. I did not vote on that question.

Mr. CONKLING. There was no division on the question, and the Senator has a right to move to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No record of that vote was made, and any Senator can move a reconsideration.

Mr. McDONALD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to refer the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 16, noes 23.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following resolution, which may as well be acted on at once:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish to the Senate a tabulated statement showing by States the total amount of claims growing out of the late war which have been presented to and rejected by the Treasury Department from March 4, 1861, to March 4, 1879, inclusive; and also of all like claims which may there be now pending.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let that lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GARLAND. If there is no other legislative business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened; and (at one o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

several street railways in said cities, giving the number of streets and avenues over which the railways are or have been run in each of said cities, the number of square yards occupied by each railway, and the amount assessed on each street or avenue; likewise the amounts actually paid by each of the said street railways and the amount charged per square yard thereto on account of such assessments; and likewise whether any compromise has been made with any of such street railways in respect to such assessments and the terms of such compromise, the date thereof, if any such were made, and the amounts paid by such railways thereunder, and how many of the said commissioners were parties thereto, and whether any of said commissioners are now or were heretofore stockholders in any of the said railways, and if so, who; also whether any person who has held, heretofore, the office of commissioner of the District of Columbia has been a stockholder in said street railways; and also whether a less sum per square yard along the line of any such street railways has been charged to any of the said street railways than to private citizens of the two cities aforesaid.

REIMBURSEMENT TO EX SOLDIERS, SAILORS, ETC.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask unanimous consent to present a petition signed by about twenty thousand ex-soldiers or their immediate friends, asking for certain relief. I ask that the body of the petition without the names be read and printed in the RECORD, and that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have already introduced a bill in accordance with the prayer of the petition. At the proper time I propose to address the House in behalf of these petitioners.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned petitioners, having served faithfully the Government of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, as will be seen by our records in the War and Navy Departments, ask to lay before your honorable body a statement of our grievances and to petition for relief.

First. We would remind your honorable body that we were paid in a depreciated currency, worth during the greater part of our terms of service from forty to seventy cents on the dollar in coin.

Second. The Government has since declared that the payment of the bondholders in the same money that the soldiers were paid in would be dishonesty and repudiation.

Third. We do not believe that the bondholders have a claim either in law or equity better than the men who offered their lives that the nation might live.

Therefore we believe that the Government is honestly and justly indebted to the soldiers for the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment, with 6 per cent. interest, compounded semi-annually, and that Congress should provide for the payment of such sums as may be found due to each soldier, sailor, or marine, or their lawful heirs, with interest as above, in a full legal-tender greenback, not to be fundable into bonds of any rate or class.

Therefore we, the undersigned soldiers and sailors, do respectfully petition your honorable body to pass a law covering the above points at once, and thus give immediate and direct relief to one million of the defenders of our Government in its hour of trial and danger, and indirectly to forty millions of American citizens by reason of the impetus given to all industrial pursuits. For this act of justice and relief to all the people we shall ever pray.

There being no objection, the body of the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and the petition referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES S. CLARK AND EDWARD FULTON.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2776) for the relief of James S. Clark and Edward Fulton; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

SOMERVILLE & DAVIS.

SAN ANTONIO ARSENAL.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2778) to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land to enlarge and protect the San Antonio arsenal; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2779) proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting polygamy in the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that this proposed article of amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

M. M. HERR.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POEHLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2782) to authorize the Red Wing and Trenton Transit Company to erect a bridge across the east channel or slough of the Mississippi River, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. FERDON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved That the Committee on War Claims be authorized to employ an assistant clerk during the Forty-sixth Congress, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $6 per diem.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the morning hour, which now begins at six minutes after one o'clock. The unfinished business of the morning hour is the consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes. This comes over from the last session, and the Chair will cause the Journal to be read, so it may be seen by members what is the exact situation of the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker then proceeded, as the regular order of business, to call the committees for reports, and announced the first business in order under said call to be the bill of the House (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes, reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, on the 12th instant, as a substitute for the bill of the House (H. R. No. 293) to prohibit officers of and claimants against, or contractors under the United States, from contributing money for political purposes, the pending question being the demand of Mr. HOSTETLER for the previous question;

When,

Mr. HOSTETLER withdrew the said demand, and yielded the floor to Mr. MCLANE.

During the debate, Mr. MCLANE was called to order by Mr. HAWLEY for words spoken in said debate;

When,

Mr. MCLANE having explained the same, the Speaker held the words in question not to be in violation of the rules.

Mr. CALKINS appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Pending which,

Mr. COX moved that the said appeal do lie on the table;

When,

Mr. CALKINS withdrew the said appeal.

Mr. MCLANE thereupon resumed and concluded his remarks. At the expiration of which Mr. HOSTETLER renewed the demand for the previous question on the said bill.

Pending which the morning hour expired.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill may be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

To prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for any officer, clerk, or employé of the Government of the United States to contribute or pay to any committee or person, or into any fund, any money, property, or other valuable for any political purpose whatsoever, or to pay any assessment or percentage upon the income or emoluments of his salary or compensation for any political purpose, or give, lend, advance, or pay any money, property, or valuable thing, with the intent, assent, permission, knowledge, or understanding that the same may be applied to such purpose; and any of said officers, clerks, or employés who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be immediately dismissed from the office, clerkship, or employment which they may hold.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of each of the heads of Departments of the Federal Government to issue, and keep posted, a standing order in their respective departments, prohibiting the officers, clerks, and employés in said departments from violating any of the provisions of the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful for any head of Department or other superior officer of the Federal Government to collect, or permit or allow any other person to collect or receive, from any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department or under his supervision, any assessment, percentage, contribution, gift, loan, or advance of any money, property, or other valuable thing, with the knowledge, intent, understanding, or permission that the same shall or may be used for any political purpose; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or any head of Department who shall fail or refuse to promulgate the order as mentioned in the second section of this act, or who shall fail or refuse to dismiss from office or employment any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department who shall violate any of the provisions of the first section of this act, on the same coming to his knowledge, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than one month nor more than six months, and, in the discretion of the court, by a fine of not more than $5,000.

SEC. 4. That any person having a contract with the United States, or any officer thereof, or who shall have had such contract within three months previous, or who shall have such contract within three months thereafter, who shall pay or contribute, either directly or indirectly, any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose, shall be deemed to have forfeited all rights, and the same shall thereby be rendered null and void, and all officers of the Government are hereby prohibited from executing any contract with any party so offending; and that any person having any pending claim against the United States, or before any Department or officer of the Government thereof, who shall pay or contribute any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose, shall thereby forfeit said claim, and all right to recover or receive anything on the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he intends to admit any further amendment than what has already been offered? There is a verbal correction which I think he will consent to. The bill in one place uses the expression "Government of the United States" and afterward the "Federal Government." I suggest the word "Federal" should be stricken out, and after the word "Government" the words "of the United States" should be inserted, so as to make the entire bill harmonious, at least in its phraseology. If we are to pass this proposition, and it shall become a law, we want to have it well constructed. I do not think there will be any objection to that amendment.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is agreed to. The question now is on seconding the demand for the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Is that the question now pending?

The SPEAKER. That is the question now pending.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to allow a certain length of time for debate on this bill.

Mr. HOSTETLER. In response to the gentleman from Michigan I have to say that we have offered several times to make this a special order and to have a special time fixed for its consideration, but so far we have failed to come to any agreement with the other side of the House. The object that we had in view was to fix a time for amendments and discussion of the bill. I have had no objection at any time to such a course being taken, but it has been constantly refused by the other side of the House, and therefore the previous question was called. If the gentleman will designate a day for the consideration of this bill, and for its consideration from day to day until disposed of, I shall have no objection to agreeing to it.

Mr. CONGER. I presume there will be no objection to making some arrangement as to the time for the consideration of this question. I desire, however, to say to the gentleman from Indiana, that the objection to fixing a day was made during the extra session, and it was then made because of the opinion of some gentlemen of the House that the extra session was called for a particular purpose—the consideration of the appropriation bills—and therefore our friends here were opposed to any and all legislation on general subjects other than those appropriation bills. And they did persistently object because they wished, as I have stated, to adhere to the consideration of the one subject for which Congress was called together in extra session. Now that we are in regular session, we only desire there shall be opportunity for debate and amendment of whatever bills may be presented. Speaking for myself, Mr. Speaker, I consider this bill the most direct and barefaced attack upon the rights of American citizens that has ever been made by the boldest man who ever presented a bill to take away the rights of the citizens.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONGER. Now, in order that we may have time to amend it and discuss it, I have made this inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan indicate a day?

Mr. CONGER. I would prefer, if the Chair please, that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it may be fully discussed. I am willing to fix a day in the Committee of the Whole when it shall be considered.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Why not agree on a day now?

Mr. CONGER. I only speak for myself.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Fix the day in the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that we now agree on a day convenient to all, when the bill shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole, for that is the place where the fuller debate can take place under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILSON. Say next Tuesday?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman will find it difficult to get any debate on any other subject than an appropriation bill before the Christmas holidays.

Mr. WILSON. Let us try it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest some day after the holidays.

Mr. McLANE. I suggest that we go into the Committee of the Whole and take it up after the bill now pending there has been disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say to the gentleman having control of this bill, that there are several of our friends here who wish to speak on the bill, and who have not given it that attention or made the preparation they regard as necessary or desirable, and I think it is important enough to give them sufficient time for that examination.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Let us agree on a day now.

Mr. GARFIELD. Any day after the holidays will be agreeable to gentlemen here.

Mr. KEIFER. Say the 8th of January.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; let us say the 8th of January; Jackson's day is a good day.

Mr. McLANE. For my part I beg gentlemen of the committee not to send this bill to the Committee of the Whole. We have it now in the morning hour and can dispose of it without prejudice to any other business.

Mr. KEIFER. But we have not had a morning hour this session.

Mr. GARFIELD. The morning hour is no place for the consideration of so important a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest it be made a special order in the House for some future day.

Mr. GARFIELD. If a day be fixed for its consideration in the House, then it should be as in Committee of the Whole, so as to get the advantage of the five-minute debate.

The SPEAKER. That can be done.

Mr. FRYE. I suggest the 1st day of April as an appropriate day. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I hope my friends will not consent to have this bill sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for that would be equivalent to its death. I know gentlemen may desire to have more opportunity to debate it, but we do not know when it will come up, or when it will be disposed of, and I hope we will therefore pursue the matter now in the morning hour and end it at once. Gentlemen have had all the vacation to study this bill and all its ramifications in politics, the President has had the opportunity to practice on it, and men who are connected with our Government know all about it. We know all about it, and let us end it.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from New York has been a member of the House so long and a member of the Committee on Rules so long that I am surprised at his suggestion that it is possible for him to end it this morning in the morning hour. I know of no way by which it can be ended in the morning hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Not if the gentleman shall not observe the rules—not if the gentleman shall insist on filibustering. But we can end it, or at least we can do our duty by endeavoring to end it in the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has had some observation and experience with these bills in the morning hour, and for the sake of harmony, for which I am always a distinguished advocate, [laughter,] I have proposed to fix a day when this shall be considered. Gentlemen who are unfriendly to the bill or its amendment oppose that.

The SPEAKER. This debate, the Chair thinks, is going beyond the rule.

Mr. COX. I know my friend from Michigan, Mr. Speaker, is a man who is friendly to harmony on the principle that "a discreet discord maketh a comely concordance." [Laughter.] I declare to this House from my experience here that when you send a bill of this kind to the Committee of the Whole, it is sending it to a place where it will know no waking except a waking in the Irish sense of the term, which means death. [Laughter.]

I should like to have the gentleman from Indiana go on with the bill now, and I am sure there is not the same motive nor the same reason on the part of that side of the House during this long session to delay it by filibustering as there was during the extra session. I hope the gentleman will go on with the bill now.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the proposition to fix a day in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will be adopted. The Committee of the Whole has been suggested because there debate will be freer under the five-minute rule. If taken up in the House under the five-minute rule, perhaps the same object could be accomplished. I have no question about that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has caused to be examined the record as to special orders, and finds that if this bill goes over beyond the holidays it can be assigned for Wednesday, the 7th day of January, which is undisposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HAYES. Fix its consideration for that day.

The SPEAKER. In the House?

Mr. CONGER. As in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARFIELD. If gentlemen will allow me, I will say a single word. There has never been and there is not now any opposition on this side of the House to the consideration of this bill when it may be open for debate and amendment. What we have always objected to is a forcible pressure of this bill in the morning hour, where there could be no adequate opportunity for amendment or debate. I think the suggestion of fixing a day for debate on this bill in the Committee of the Whole or in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, and the bill to be considered from day to day until disposed of, will meet with no objection on this side of the House, and I presume it will be agreeable also to gentlemen on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will, then, on that day recognize the gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill, if unanimous consent be given to this proposition, which the Chair will state: That this bill be taken out of the morning hour and assigned for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal on the 7th of January, and that it be proceeded with from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us not say after the reading of the Journal; let it be after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will, then, state the proposition modified in that way. It is to take this bill out of the morning hour and have it assigned as a special order in the House as in Committee of the Whole after the morning hour, on the 7th day of January, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will, then, on that day recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] in charge of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the bill reported as a substitute be reprinted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that the bill be reprinted. The Chair hears no objection. The bill which has been read is the House bill No. 2266, which is a substitute reported by the committee for the original bill, No. 293, as introduced and referred. It is sufficient, the Chair thinks, to print the substitute.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is there no time limited when the vote will be taken on this bill?

The SPEAKER. It will be in the power of the House at any time to order the previous question whenever the majority thinks a sufficient time has been had for debate and a sufficient opportunity for amendment. The majority of the House has power over its own legislation.

Mr. CONGER. But I think the understanding was, or we gain nothing by this arrangement, that the bill should be at least open for amendment and debate for a certain length of time.

The SPEAKER. This order does not restrict the debate. It merely makes the assignment of the bill for a day when it will be open for debate.

Mr. CONGER. Our sole object was that we should have a time fixed for amendment and debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is the object of the gentleman from Indiana also.

Mr. CONGER. It should be mentioned in the order.

The SPEAKER. It is not usual to put such an understanding in the motion.

Mr. CONGER. The understanding is that the bill shall be debated as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. If it is considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole it will be governed by the rules regulating the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. As to amendments?

The SPEAKER. Except that the previous question can be called.

Mr. CONGER. We will reserve our remedies, then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt of that.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The bill which has just been assigned for consideration on the 7th of January came up in the morning hour to-day under Rules 136 and 56. This being a new session, the Chair will now call the committees for reports, commencing at the beginning of the list of committees, the Committee of Elections.

R. H. CAIN.

Mr. CALKINS. I am directed by the Committee of Elections to report back the memorial of Hon. R. H. Cain, accompanied by a report in writing thereon. This is a report on a memorial for expenses in a contest. I think there is nothing necessary to be read except the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Hon. R. H. Cain, asking compensation for expenses incurred in a contest for his seat in the last House, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report that they have unanimously agreed that said Cain should be paid the sum of $175 in full for all claims on account of such contest.

They therefore recommend that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for provision for the payment thereof.

W. H. CALKINS,
For Committee.

The report was adopted.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask, at the request of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. EINSTEIN,] that Mr. J. H. Puleston, a member of the British Parliament, be allowed to come on the floor.

There was no objection.

DOORKEEPER FOR THE COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the following:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be authorized to employ a doorkeeper, to act also as messenger, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and who shall receive the same compensation as is now paid to messengers employed by the Doorkeeper of the House, and who shall hold office until otherwise ordered by the House.

The question was upon adopting the resolution.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will state that this is the unanimous report of the Committee of Ways and Means, and is in accordance with the precedents established by the last four Congresses.

Mr. SCALES. Is it in order to move to refer this resolution to the Committee of Accounts?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SCALES. Then I make that motion.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am aware that under ordinary circumstances that would be the proper course. But I submit to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] that, in view of the fact that for four Congresses past the Committee of Ways and Means have reported a like resolution to this, and this is now the unanimous report of the committee, it is hardly worth while to refer it to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. SCALES. I think the regular course has been to refer all such matters as this to the Committee of Accounts. I have great confidence in the committee over which the gentleman from New York presides, and have no idea it would recommend anything improper. Still, I think it better that all these things should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Very well; I will consent to that.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee of Accounts.

LAKE CHARLES, LOUISIANA.

Mr. ACKLEN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2785) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Lake Charles, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Lake Charles, Calcasieu Parish, State of Louisiana, who shall have power to enter and clear all vessels coming to that port.

Mr. ACKLEN. I think it entirely unnecessary to detain the House by any explanation of this matter. This bill is simply one providing for the appointment of a deputy collector at the port of Lake Charles, Louisiana, who shall be authorized to enter and clear vessels. Lake Charles is situated in the parish of Calcasieu, State of Louisiana. It is a port where a number of vessels plying between that port and Galveston, as well as a number of foreign vessels, enter for the purpose of obtaining lumber principally. Under the present law such vessels are obliged to go about one hundred and seventy-five miles, to the port of Brashear, to obtain a clearance.

It has been deemed best, and the Secretary of the Treasury has written a letter recommending, that Congress authorize him to appoint a deputy collector at that port for the purpose indicated in the bill which has been just read by the Clerk.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman say that the Secretary of the Treasury recommends the passage of this bill?

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes. Does the gentleman desire to have read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. ACKLEN. I will send up to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1879.

SIR: This Department is in receipt of a letter, dated the 14th instant, from Hon. JOSEPH H. ACKLEN, stating that your committee has under consideration House bill No. —, providing for a port of entry at the town of Lake Charles, in Calcasieu Parish, Louisiana, and that the sub-committee, of which he is chairman, have reported unanimously, as a substitute for said bill, a bill providing that "the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a deputy collector at Lake Charles, Calcasieu Parish, State of Louisiana, who shall have the power to enter and clear all vessels coming to that port."

In reply, I have the honor to state that the terms of the bill reported by Mr. ACKLEN fully answer the purpose for which it appears to have been framed, viz: to allow the direct exportation of lumber from the place above mentioned, and that this Department has no objection to its passage.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side of the House to the fact that this does not constitute Lake Charles a port of entry, but simply permits the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at that place for the clearance of vessels.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. DUNNELL. There seems to be no provision in this bill for the payment of this collector. Is he to be paid under some general law?

Mr. ACKLEN. Under a general law; $3 a day.

The SPEAKER. All customs officers are paid out of a permanent appropriation.

Mr. REAGAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] that this Lake Charles exports lumber very largely; that is its chief export. At the present time owners of vessels have to go, as has been stated, about one hundred and seventy-five miles to obtain a clearance. The object of this bill is to facilitate the clearance of vessels.

Mr. WHITE. It appears that at many ports we have collectors whose salaries are greater than the revenue derived from those ports. I do not understand from the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury that he recommends the passage of this bill; he simply states that he has no objection to its passage. I would like to know of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] what is the probable amount of revenue likely to be received from this port, should this bill pass. And what would be the salary of the officer to be appointed? Is it to be $3 a day for the time employed?

Mr. ACKLEN. The facts which the gentleman desires from me are clearly set forth in the printed report which is in the hands of the Clerk. I can summarize them by stating that a great many million feet of lumber are shipped from this port directly to Europe; a large quantity is also shipped to Galveston and Central America. I cannot tell the gentleman the exact amount of revenue that might arise under these circumstances; but he will bear in mind that it was in this parish where occurred some time ago what was termed the Calcasieu log war. Many of the difficulties which arose at that time might have been avoided if this port had then had a deputy collector authorized to enter and clear vessels. This would have avoided the necessity of sending them one hundred and seventy-five miles to the port of Brashear.

Mr. WHITE. This bill will not give facilities for stealing Government lumber?

Mr. ACKLEN. Not at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ACKLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNLADING OF FOREIGN VESSELS.

Mr. WAIT. I am unanimously directed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill (H. R. No. 2786) relating to the unlading of foreign vessels.

The bill was read a first and second time. It provides that the provisions of section 2771 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to allow any vessel not of the United States to unload at any port of delivery in a customs collection district after due entry of such vessel and cargo at a port of entry in the same district.

Mr. WAIT. I desire to make a brief explanation of the effect of this bill, and the evil which it is intended to remedy. Parties who are importing various products of the West India Islands into my own State (and I presume the same thing exists in other States) are frequently compelled to employ foreign vessels to bring their goods into this country, not being able, when they purchase these articles in foreign ports, to obtain the services of American vessels. These foreign vessels, on arriving at the United States, are obliged under the provisions of existing laws to unlade at a port of entry, and then it is necessary, by lighters, railroad communication, or otherwise, to carry the cargoes to a port of delivery, if such port of delivery is the place to which the goods are consigned. Let me show how harshly this law operates in my own district. New London, in my State, is a port of entry; Norwich is a port of delivery. Now, we have at Norwich a large mercantile establishment, which is constantly importing merchandise of different kinds from the West India Islands. Frequently this house is unable to obtain American vessels to bring those various goods to this country, and are obliged to employ the services of foreign vessels. On the arrival of any one of these vessels at New London it is compelled under the existing law to which I have referred, and which was enacted in 1799, to unlade its cargo there and put it on board of an American vessel to be carried fourteen miles up the river to the port of delivery, where the storehouses of the importers to whom the same is consigned are situated. Now, in order to obviate difficulties of this kind, embarrassing and I may say oppressive in their results, the bill provides that when a foreign vessel arrives at a port of entry it can, after the due entry of the vessel and cargo at such port, without unlading, go to the port of delivery and there deliver its cargo to the consignees.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WAIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are two very serious objections to the passage of this bill. It is general in its terms, and would therefore apply to all the ports of delivery in the United States. Under this bill a foreign vessel may enter the Mississippi River, and if it can reach ports up the river it may go to every port of delivery on the river or its tributaries, thus taking away to that extent the carrying trade of our own vessels on those rivers. These foreign vessels may enter the Saint Lawrence, pass up the Welland Canal, and deliver at any port of delivery on our lakes, thus not only interfering with the carrying trade of our own vessels from foreign countries to our ocean ports, but taking away the trade of our own vessels wherever the foreign craft can reach.

For myself, I am opposed to any bill which takes away the carrying trade of American vessels in American waters. This is an objection which in my estimation seems to be fatal to this bill, unless greater restrictions be introduced. There is another objection. If a foreign vessel may land and unload at one interior port different from the port of entry, it may land at all ports of delivery; and in this way the coasting trade as well as the interior carrying trade of the country may be usurped. I submit that the gentleman does not desire by this bill to open the way for throwing into the hands of foreign vessel-owners all the interior carrying trade of our lakes and rivers.

For some years past the carrying trade of our great lakes has been conducted at a uniform loss to the vessel-owners. This fall, for the first time during many years, the shipping interests have had a little revival, and have for the first time in many years made something above expenses—something in the way of profit. This is true on the Mississippi and its tributaries; it is true on the Hudson; it is especially true on the great lines of commerce upon the lakes.

Such a law as this tends to throw into the hands of the foreign ship-owners the carrying trade more or less taken from our own people. It tends to give a portion of the coasting trade of our ocean ports to foreigners.

I ask the gentlemen who have charge of the bill to allow it to be recommitted, so those guards may be thrown around its provisions which may by examination be deemed proper. I think in some sense such guards should be adopted.

There is no particular reason why an Atlantic port of delivery may not receive directly, without unloading at the port of entry, a shipment of goods. It can be properly guarded so as not to injure our shipping or so as not to tend toward an infringement of the rights of American shippers. The bill, it seems to me, is now fatal or at least very dangerous to the shipping interests of the United States. While it might accommodate this port or that port, while it might accommodate this consignee or that consignee, is undoubtedly true, nevertheless it should be guarded as that it shall not, while meeting a few exceptional cases, throw wide open the doors to the injury which I can foresee to our shipping interests. While I am not opposed to a proper bill to meet these special circumstances which gentlemen desire, I do hope this bill will be recommitted in order that it may be prepared with better guards against the injuries I have pointed out.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House, has been very fully considered by the Committee on Commerce. It presents in part the question raised by the gentleman from Michigan; but it does not go to the extent he seems to suppose, of authorizing foreign ships to engage in the coast trade of the United States. It does this much, that where vessels come to this country sometimes laden for different ports, as in the case suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, it enables them to discharge cargoes of imported goods, but not of domestic products, at more than one port; and not compel the merchants to whom the goods are consigned to receive them at a port distant from the one for which they are intended, and impose on them thereby the expense of reshipment to the port of destination from the first port to which the vessel arrives.

It does not affect the coasting trade so far as taking up commerce at any American port or landing at an American port by a foreign ship. That cannot be done under this bill, but where a cargo comes consigned to more than one port it does permit an innovation upon the existing law to the extent of permitting that vessel to discharge her cargo at more than one port.

Mr. CONGER. May I ask the gentleman, in order to illustrate this, one question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. On the Mississippi River there are but two ports of entry until you reach Saint Paul, one at New Orleans and the old port of entry, before Louisiana was annexed to this Union, at Natchez. The other ports on the Mississippi River, and the other ports on the Ohio River, are Louisville, Saint Louis, Cincinnati, and Memphis, but all these are ports of delivery. I ask the gentleman whether there is anything to prevent a vessel from the West Indies, or from any foreign port, laden with a cargo for New Orleans, Natchez, Memphis, Saint Louis, or any place on those rivers where it is supposed foreign vessels can navigate or be towed, from landing its cargo along the whole length of those rivers?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not think there is anything in the bill which would prevent that; but I desire to say this, Mr. Speaker, that in looking to practical legislation which shall benefit our commerce and cheapen transportation to our people it is not best to be governed in our consideration of such propositions by an extreme supposable case, but, on the contrary, we should take the practical effect which the law will have.

It is not very probable that foreign vessels would take cargoes up the Mississippi and its tributaries. They may come to New Orleans, but it is not likely they would receive cargoes and undertake the dangerous navigation of our inland waters to deliver them at other places than the chief ports of entry, nor is it probable that sailing vessels, which bear the larger part of this merchandise, would go to the expense of being towed, which would cost more than the freight they receive.

Now, then, while I do not propose in this bill to disturb the law as it exists protecting our own ship-owners in the monopoly of the coasting trade, we do propose in the interest of the people, without material interference in any way with the interest of American ship-owners, to say that as to foreign cargoes when sent to this country, if consigned to more than one port, they may be discharged at the ports to which they are consigned without driving the consignees to the expense of having them unloaded at one port and then of reshipment by vessel or railroad to the various ports of their destination.

It is simply a question of practical convenience. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] has found it in his district a matter of inconvenience to compel the consignees to receive their cargoes at ports distant from the one at which the vessel originally arrives. Everywhere it is found the same. The committee have considered the subject very carefully, and I do not think there was any opposition to the bill as reported. Its practical effect is to cheapen the cost of transportation while it injures nobody.

Mr. WAIT. Now, Mr. Speaker, the firm of J. M. Huntington & Co. are the only merchants in the West India trade at the port of Norwich, paying in fact three-quarters if not nine-tenths of all the duties collected in that district, and there are times when it is impossible for them to obtain the service of American ships at the islands, and they are compelled to put the goods which they desire to bring into this country on board of foreign vessels, the service of which they may be able to secure in the ports from which they make their importations. They come now to New London, and under the operation of this law, which has until within a year or two been virtually a dead letter upon the statute-book, not having been regarded or enforced by the collector, they are compelled to unload their vessels at that port of New London and lighter up fourteen miles to Norwich, subjecting them to the expense on every cargo of from two to three hundred dollars. I learn from the collector at New London that under the administration of all his predecessors, so far as he can learn by inquiry, the unlading of foreign vessels at the port of Norwich, after due entry of the same at the port of New London, was sanctioned by the Treasury Department. The duties on the cargo were paid at the port of entry upon the arrival of the vessel and the production of the manifest and invoice, and then she was permitted to proceed to the port of delivery. And this equitable, and I may say just, construction of the statute worked no injury to the Government; every dollar of duties was paid and the Department not subjected to any additional expense.

I can illustrate the embarrassments under which importers labor in my State by another case. On the Connecticut River the port of entry is at the city of Middletown, some forty miles up the river. Now there are goods imported which are to be delivered at the port of entry at Saybrook, near the mouth of the river, and under the operation of this law of 1799 if such goods are brought into this country in foreign vessels the consignees are compelled to carry the same in such vessel up to Middletown, there unload them, and then lighter them down or send them down by railroad forty miles to the place where they are intended to be delivered.

The committee were unanimous in proposing this legislation, believing it to be eminently proper, and I have a letter from the Norwich importers, to which I have referred, which I ask may be read, as it presents their claims for relief in clear and intelligent terms.

The Clerk read as follows:

NORWICH, CONNECTICUT, May 2, 1879.

DEAR SIR: We have duly received your valued communications, advising us of the fact that the bill to allow foreign vessels to unlade at ports other than ports of entry has been introduced by you and referred to your committee. We wish to express to you our thanks for this action, referring as it does to cases in which we are particularly interested, and beg to add that we believe the bill is intended to promote the commercial interests of every port in the country. For instance, we now know of a case where a foreign vessel is reported as bound to Saybrook, Connecticut. The port of entry for the district in which Saybrook is located is Middletown; so, if the law is enforced in this case, the entire cargo must be unloaded at Middletown, a port to which the vessel probably could not proceed on account of shoal water, or if she could, the cargo would be up the Connecticut River, about forty miles from its proper destination, causing great and unnecessary expense. In our own case, as we have already told you, we are subjected to an expense of about $200 for lighterage on every cargo we import in foreign vessels, to say nothing of delay which may cause us to lose favorable turns in the market besides the damage to goods resulting from this unnecessary reshipment. We sincerely hope the bill may be passed this session, thus relieving us from the expense and annoyance to which we are subjected.

Very truly, yours,

J. M. HUNTINGTON & CO.

Hon. JOHN T. WAIT, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask the gentleman whether the Treasury Department has recommended this action?

Mr. WAIT. In reply to the gentleman from Minnesota I beg leave to submit a letter which I have received from the Treasury Department relating to this proposed change of the law, and advising it as demanded in justice to many of our leading importers.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1879.

SIR: In a communication to the Department, of the 21st of February last, you request that authority be given to certain foreign vessels that come with cargoes and make entry at New London, Connecticut, to unlade and deliver their cargoes at Norwich, in the same district. Since the receipt of your letter the collector at New London has been informed that the Department has no authority to grant such permission, the statutes (see section 2771, R. S.) expressly forbidding every vessel not of the United States to unlade elsewhere than at a port of entry.

This provision of law was enacted, it is to be presumed, for the purpose of confining the coastwise carrying trade of foreign cargoes to American vessels. A foreign vessel is compelled to unlade at a port of entry so much of her cargo as may be destined to a port of delivery; the transportation of the cargo thence to a port of delivery is thus made to inure to the benefit of a vessel of the United States.

As a general rule, the law is in this respect beneficial. But there are instances in which it works great hardships; for example, when an American citizen imports in a foreign bottom dutiable freight found in a foreign port whence no American vessel sails. In this case, to require the American importer to unlade an entire cargo at a port of entry in order to transport the same but a few miles in an American vessel, is of itself a check on the natural course of trade and may subject him to expenses which are burdensome and unjust. The statutes already allow a foreign vessel to unlade a part of her cargo at one port of entry and to proceed to another port of entry to unlade the residue.

I see no objection, therefore, to allowing foreign vessels to unlade at ports of delivery after entry of the vessel and cargo at a port of entry subject to the decision of the Department, and I transmit herewith the draught of a joint resolution to that effect.

Very respectfully,

H. S. FRENCH,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JOHN T. WAIT,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BARBER. Suppose one portion of a vessel's cargo is for Mobile and another for New Orleans and another for Memphis, and the vessel enters at New Orleans, is it to be allowed to take the other portions of the cargo to Mobile and Memphis?

Mr. WAIT. The port of entry and port of delivery must be within the same district. You cannot enter your vessel with your cargo at a port of entry in one district and then go into two or three other different districts and ports of delivery. The bill in express language guards against any such procedure. You can only unlade at a port of delivery in the district in which the port of entry is situated.

Mr. BARBER. Is there restriction on that?

Mr. WAIT. Yes, sir; as I have just stated in unequivocal language.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen should have an opportunity to read the debate on this proposition, and in order that they may do so I now make the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. WARNER. Let the bill be printed and recommitted.

Mr. CONGER. I think the letter from the Department shows so clearly what I attempted to say about infringing upon the coasting trade that it will be well to have the bill printed before it is again considered.

Mr. ACKLEN. I insist on the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. WAIT. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan that it is perfectly proper that the bill should be printed, and I will have the accompanying report printed with it as part of my remarks. But I do not want this matter to be delayed week after week in the House, when such delay would result in very great embarassment and pecuniary injury to prominent merchants in the district I represent. I am confident that Congress on an examination of all the evidence in this case and the statute referred to will grant the relief the bill proposes.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred House resolution No. 3, being a joint resolution relating to the unlading of foreign vessels, beg leave to report:

That they have had said resolution under consideration, and also certain correspondence and other evidence brought before them, and find the following facts: That by section 2771 of the Revised Statutes, being an act of Congress passed in 1799, it was provided that vessels which are not vessels of the United States shall be admitted to unload only at ports of entry established by law. Your committee presume that the object aimed at by that legislation was to confine the coastwise carrying trade of foreign cargoes to American vessels. Though this law in its operation may as a general rule be beneficial to American commerce, yet there are many cases in which it works great hardship to American citizens who are importers of foreign products. In cases where the American merchant imports his goods in a foreign bottom, he being unable at the time to obtain the service of an American vessel in which to import the same, and the port of entry, though in the same collection district, is some miles distant from the port of delivery, he is compelled to unlade his cargo at the former port and to transport the same to the latter by lighters or perhaps by railway conveyance, and so is subjected to expenses which are unnecessary, burdensome, and unjust. The bill reported by your committee so alters section 2771 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to allow any vessel not of the United States to unlade at any port of delivery in a customs collection district after the due entry of said vessel and cargo at a port of entry in the same district.

Your committee would therefore respectfully recommend the passage of the accompanying bill for a public act instead of the resolution referred to them.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

SUPREME COURT REPORTS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of House bill No. 1493, defining the duties of the reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and resumes the consideration of House bill No. 1493, defining the duties of reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read the substitute offered by Mr. MCMILLIN for the sixth section, as follows:

Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $4,000, and said salary shall only be paid when he causes said decisions to be delivered as aforesaid to said Public Printer; with an amendment to the amendment, proposed by Mr. FINLEY, to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$3,500."

Mr. LOWE. I offer the amendment to the sixth section which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 6, line 2, insert "$3,000" in place of "$4,500;" so that it will read:

"SEC. 6. Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $3,000 when his reports of said decisions shall constitute but one volume, and an additional sum of $500 when there is printed and published two or more than one volume per year; but said salary shall only be paid when he causes said decisions to be delivered as aforesaid to said Public Printer."

Mr. LOWE. I simply desire to perfect the original section. The amendment is made in the interest of economy, and, as such, I think should commend itself to the House. If this amendment shall be adopted, then the House can choose between the sixth section, as amended, and the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MCMILLIN.]

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand the gentleman in charge of the bill agrees to this amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. By no means.

Mr. KEIFER. There is a rumor here that he acquiesces in it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No, sir. The committee fixed the compensation at the lowest amount at which it was believed to be possible to obtain the talent necessary to do the work in the way in which it should be done. The committee is aware that it requires talent and great legal learning to do this work properly, and they do not think a man of talent competent for the work can be procured for a less sum than that named in the bill. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. LOWE. I can inform the gentleman from Virginia that there are several gentlemen in my district who are quite competent to do this work, and who would do it for the salary named in my amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that the amount named in the bill is certainly not a large salary for a competent man. There may be an impression on the part of some gentlemen that the reporter has little to do outside of mere clerical work. That is a great mistake. It frequently requires a great deal of careful examination to get at the real points of the case. I understand, also, it is necessary for the reporter to make up the syllabi of the cases by means of which the lawyers can get at the real points without reading the entire opinion.

Mr. FRYE. As a member of the Judiciary Committee I examined this bill somewhat at the time when it was introduced in the Forty-fifth Congress, and I remember perfectly well that my proposition was that the salary should be fixed at $4,000. I differ from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.] I believe that $4,000 will hire to-day competent reporters of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I mean that there are four thousand men in the United States entirely competent to be reporters of the decisions of the Supreme Court who can be hired for $4,000 a year. Now, sir, in the State of Maine the supreme court stands equal to the supreme court of any State in this Union, and there is not a member of the bench in Maine to-day whom I would not recommend conscientiously as a judge of the supreme judicial court of the United States. And yet, sir, those judges at the outside do not get a salary over $2,500 a year. And you may take the average salaries of the judges of the several States in this country North—I do not know how it is South—and they will not exceed $3,000 a year. The idea that you cannot get a reporter to report properly the decisions of the Supreme Court for $4,000 a year is, in my opinion, absurd. I am in favor of a fair, reasonable, liberal salary, and I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] fixing that salary at $4,000 a year. I conscientiously believe that to be ample and liberal.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to be speaking to an amendment not now pending.

Mr. FRYE. I beg pardon of the committee; I thought the same amendment was pending now that was pending last evening.

Mr. KEIFER. The proposition now pending is to fix the salary of the reporter at $3,000 a year.

Mr. FINLEY. My amendment is to make it $3,500.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Maine has been speaking in favor of $4,000 a year.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; I am in favor of $4,000 a year, but not of $3,500.

Mr. KEIFER. I have heard this argument in favor of low salaries before. It is very common for a man to say that he can hire hands for a dollar a day when they ought to have $2. We have a great many people in our State who talk that sort of thing before the public, when they are talking economy. Now I do not believe there are four thousand men in Ohio who ought to be compelled to work for $4,000 a year, performing this labor and living in the city of Washington. The gentleman may say that the judges of the supreme court in his State are not paid $4,000 a year; but I do not think he will say they ought not to be paid $5,000 a year.

Mr. FRYE. I did not say that four thousand competent men could be found in Ohio. My judgment is that a large number of the competent men of Ohio are already in office. [Great laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. I am very glad to say that that remark has not the merit of novelty. I heard that same thing when I first came to Congress, and heard it from the other side of the House, stated substantially in that language. I will, however, give the gentleman the credit of repeating it, for it seems to please members all around me.

If the judges of the supreme court of the State of Maine are what the gentleman says they are, competent men, and I have no doubt they are, I would like to know if he thinks they are paid enough when they are paid but $2,500 a year.

Mr. FRYE. What are the judges of the supreme court of Ohio paid?

Mr. KEIFER. They are paid $3,500 a year each; and that is too little.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. LOWE, to make the salary of the reporter of the Supreme Court $3,000 a year instead of $4,500; and upon a division it was not agreed to—ayes 43, noes 80.

Mr. BROWNE. Is this sixth section still open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. There is a substitute pending for the section.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to move an amendment to the original section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to amend the section by striking out the words "when his reports of said decisions shall constitute but one volume, and an additional sum of $500 when there is printed and published more than one volume per year;" so that the section if amended will read:

Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $4,500, but said salary shall only be paid when he causes said decisions to be delivered as aforesaid to said Public Printer.

That fixes the salary of the reporter of the Supreme Court at $4,500 a year, and leaves no part of his compensation contingent upon the publication of a second volume of reports in the same year. I have heard much said by gentlemen about the necessity of suitably compensating talent; that it is necessary to pay a very considerable sum in order to secure men who are competent to perform the duties of the office.

Now, I remember the time when the salary of a member of the American Congress was but $3,000 a year. It was increased to $5,000 a year, and we then obtained precisely the same men, of the same order of ability. Subsequently it was increased to $7,500 a year, and the same men were returned to Congress; that is to say, all of them that could get back.

The point I desire to make is this: you may to-day reduce the pay of members of the American Congress to $2,500 a year, and every man of you will want to get back to Congress; every one of you. A gentleman near me suggests that we should have it as it is in the British House of Commons; that members should serve gratuitously. Well, sir, even if we did that, the services of some of us would be tolerably dear.

Mr. FRYE. You speak for no one but yourself. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE. I speak for nobody but myself. What I want to say is that I am in favor of paying the reporter of the Supreme Court, as all other officers of the Government, a fair compensation for the services he performs. We obtain for the supreme bench of the different States the highest order of judicial talent in those States for a sum less than $4,500 a year. The very best lawyers in each State are on the supreme bench of that State. They are men who in their brains forge these judicial opinions; not simple clerks or prothonotaries, but men whose brain-power is called into requisition for the purpose of making the opinions. If you procure judicial talent fit to make judicial opinions to be placed upon the record for $4,500 a year, why is not that sum enough to pay the clerk of the court who merely superintends the printing of its opinions? I admit that in some instances he prepares a syllabus of the case; but with that exception he is not required to exercise any thought at all, or none of any consequence.

I say that for all purposes of superintending the printing of the reports of the Supreme Court of any year in a volume, and for the purpose of preparing a syllabus of each case in the volume, $4,500 a year is ample to secure the very best order of ability for the purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. BROWNE, and it was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FINLEY, to strike out $4,000 in the substitute of Mr. MCMILLIN and insert in lieu thereof $3,500, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 48, noes 75.

The question recurring on the substitute of Mr. MCMILLIN, it was read, as follows:

Said reporter shall receive for his services, from the Treasury, an annual salary of $4,000; but said salary shall only be paid when he causes said decisions to be delivered as aforesaid to said Public Printer.

The substitute was agreed to, there being—ayes 96, noes 46.

Mr. WHITE. I move to amend by adding to section 6 the following:

The opinions only of the majority giving the judgment of the court shall be published in such reports.

[Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen around me say "oh, no!" I simply offer this amendment as indicating my own view. The purpose of this bill seems to be to cheapen the United States Reports. With this view the second section sought to confine this publication to such cases only as raised new questions, or questions of general public interest. The purpose of that provision was to decrease the size of the volumes.

In the State of Pennsylvania we have by law prohibited the publication of dissenting opinions with the report of the decisions of the court. This system has worked well and receives the approbation of the judges and the profession.

The publication of the dissenting opinions which may be delivered is calculated, it seems to me, to confuse the profession. All that is desired by the profession is the opinion of the court pronouncing the judgment in the case.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I think that every lawyer will agree that the dissenting opinion of the court is frequently the more important of the two. It frequently has more sense in it and the people take more stock in it. Take the Dred Scott case, which has become historical by this time. We of the North at least believe that the more valuable of the opinions in that case were the opinions of the minority of the court. The object of publishing the decisions of the Supreme Court is more than simply to furnish the public and the profession with the judgment of the court in the case. It is desired in most cases to see the reasonings by which the court arrived at its conclusion. It is very important to the profession that the minority opinion should go upon the record and be published in the report.

Mr. WHITE. My friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is trying to awaken the dying embers of the war—a thing which we are all opposed to. [Laughter.] There is nothing in my amendment which prohibits the announcement of a dissenting opinion. It will become a part of the record, and can be published by private enterprise if desired. The record will be accessible to any gentleman who happens to be interested in the case or in the principle which it decides.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me say to the gentleman that the opinion of the minority is as much a part of the proceedings of the court as the opinion of the majority, and it is as much entitled to appear in the report. It would be a very marvelous thing for us to exclude from our reports of judicial opinions the reasoning of the minority of the court.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 2, noes not counted.

The Clerk read the next section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 7. That sections 681 and 682 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. REAGAN. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word, in order that I may say something in regard to an amendment which I believe was adopted to the proviso of the fourth section. The change which was made in that respect will, I fear, operate so as to embarrass the general purpose of the bill. The bill itself seems to me to have been very well framed; but I desire to call attention to two features which I believe we ought to consider carefully before voting on the amendment in the House. I call attention to these points now, because I presume that in the House debate will be cut off by the previous question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Texas that no amendment was adopted to the proviso of the fourth section.

Mr. REAGAN. An amendment was adopted somewhere providing for a different mode of selling the books from that contemplated in the proviso.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No; the gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] withdrew the amendment which he offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill was not amended in the manner the gentleman indicates.

Mr. REAGAN. I may be mistaken about the extent and character of the amendment; but, in the discussion on this subject, the view seemed to be taken that the printing of the Supreme Court reports should be placed upon the basis of any other private enterprise. I think that is a mistaken view. In order to secure official reports, which shall be accepted as authority, the States and the Federal Government assume to control and direct the manner in which the reports shall be published, so that they may be correctly gotten up and may be relied on as authority.

While abolishing in this bill the royalty which the reporter has heretofore had, we limit his compensation to the amount provided in the bill itself. My fear is, that in fixing the salary at $4,000 we have gone too low. That salary might perhaps do where living is cheaper than in Washington, or where the office of reporter requires less professional skill. For the responsible position of reporter of the Supreme Court we desire a man equal in legal attainments and character to those we have had heretofore; a man who shall render satisfaction to the Court and the country in the preparation of the reports. I fear that a compensation of $4,000 will not command the services of an able lawyer of high talent.

It was observed by several gentlemen that we should leave the matter open, so that the reports may be printed by anybody. But if the reports be simply printed by private parties, while they may be read with the consent of the Court for its information, they cannot be quoted as authority. They would lack the official sanction which now belongs, in the courts of the States and the United States, to reports made under proper authority.

A gentleman states that there is an amendment providing that nothing in this bill shall prevent private parties from publishing these reports. I simply wish to say, if this is adopted, that when you present those reports to a court it may hear them read as advisory, but it will not take them as the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, because they do not bear any official character of published reports of the decisions of that court. Every lawyer is aware of that, and hence it should not be allowed to embarrass this bill by requiring the publication of the reports of the Supreme Court as a mere matter of private speculation. There is something higher and more important in it, and they should be published so that when a lawyer cites decisions from them to another court they should bear on their face the authority that they are exactly what they allege—that they are really and actually the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Then the courts will receive them and act upon them. If that amendment is adopted, I think it will work badly in many respects; that is, if any one does not take the distinction between official reports and those published by private authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY,] which the Clerk will read.

The substitute was again read.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to explain very briefly to the House again the nature of the substitute which I have proposed for the pending bill. It will be observed, from the reading of the substitute, that I have adopted so much of the pending bill as provides specifically for the duties of the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Then I strike out the remaining portion of the bill, and, in lieu of it, insert the law as it now stands upon the statute-book, with a slight change.

I want to know, sir, and I ask gentlemen to tell me, what reason there is for changing the present law, which has stood since 1842? What is it? Under the present law we employ a Supreme Court reporter and pay him a salary of $2,500 a year. That is all the expense charged against the Government. What does the reporter do? He is bound under the law to prepare these reports for publication. That is part of his duties. He is bound to prepare these reports for publication and to see that the decisions are reported accurately and carefully, and he is empowered to let out the publication to private publishers, open to competition.

It is provided in the law that the Government shall have the benefit of three hundred copies, worth $1,500, free of expense, so that under the law all the expense the Government has to bear is the sum of $2,500 to the Supreme Court reporter. The Government gets three hundred copies for nothing. Gentlemen come in and ask us to change that law, and to put an additional burden on the Government. They want first to make the Government pay $4,500 for a reporter, and then to assume the additional expense of supplying the materials and employing additional clerical force and hands at the Government Printing Office in printing these reports for distribution. The Government is to print the reports at its own expense and assume the duty of selling them.

The only reason given for this increase of expenses is that gentlemen say that lawyers will then get their books cheaper. If the lawyers do the Government will suffer. In short, the effect will be the establishment of a Government book publishing business in order that lawyers may get their books cheaper.

I am somewhat surprised to hear such doctrine advocated by the gentleman from the Old Dominion, the democratic State of Virginia. It is in the direction of the centralization of power in this Government. First, we have a Government Printing Office, then a Government bindery, then a Government book making and selling establishment; the latter in order that lawyers may get their books cheaper. It would be in the same line of argument to insist on starting Government shoe-shops, in order that members of Congress could get their shoes cheaper; or a Government clothing establishment, in order that they might get their clothes cheaper.

I want gentlemen who advocate this bill when they go home to tell their constituents that they have increased the cost of publication of these books from $2,500 to $4,500 a year and imposed upon the Government the duty of printing them. I want them also to state why they have done this. Was it for the benefit of the Government? Was it in any manner to benefit anybody else than the lawyers of the country? I am a lawyer myself, and if I were speaking from a lawyer's stand-point for my individual benefit I would want the Government to print these books for me in order that I might get them cheaper, provided the Government would do it; but I do not believe, as a representative of the tax-payers, that I am voting as I should when I vote to increase the expense of the Government in order that lawyers or any other class of people should get their books cheaper.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DEUSTER. I move to strike out the last word, and will yield to the gentleman from Ohio the five minutes to which I am entitled under the rule.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. I have but a few words more to say. I will come now to the proposition whether we really would get these books cheaper under the pending bill, and I will for the present waive all other points. Do you get your books cheaper? The gentleman says so. He says that some book manufacturer has told him so. I dispute that proposition. Here is a statement of the cost of the publication of a series of fifty-three court reports, which I hold in my hand, and I ask gentlemen's attention to it. It is as follows:

Cost of the publication of a series of fifty-three court reports.

* Volumes 1–19 Wallace sold when published at $6; volumes 20–23 at $5. This comparison is too favorable to Wallace.

†New York court of appeals. The State gets the last volume at 48 cents; lawyers pay $1.10. Former volumes were $2.50. The low price is due to reckless competition among booksellers.

‡Last volume only; former volumes $4.50 each.

The New York Reports are got by the State at 48 cents, the lawyers buy it at $1.10, former volumes at $2.50. There is ruinous competition between rival publishers and reports are sold less than cost.

Morrison asks $5 for Court of Claims Reports printed by Public Printer, and certainly much less matter (and inferior in execution) than the Otto Reports.

Out of these fifty-three reports there are only four cheaper than the price which my substitute fixes.

Gentlemen talk about a dollar and fifty cents a volume for these reports. Why, the paper in the books is worth more than that money. The binding is from $1.50 to $2. If the Government purchases the material and does the work, and sells these books to the lawyers at a dollar and a half per volume, then a Public Printer would have to steal in some other way from the Government in order to make it up, because it cannot be done for that money. I say that if we go to any bookbinder, to any printer, and ask the cost of the material, the cost of labor, of binding—to get the cost in the aggregate—you will find these books cannot be sold for $1.50 a volume, or anything like it. If we are to take the rate at which the Public Printer has charged, and it is a fair standard to measure by, we will find the binding in many cases has cost two, three, four, four and a half, and even five dollars a volume. The Public Printer has charged, as his reports to Congress show, those as the prices for binding books of a like size.

Mr. FIELD. I am favorable to this proposition, but I want to ask why the words "and such other decisions as it may designate" in the sixth line of the first section should not be stricken out?

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection to that amendment. I copied so much of the bill reported by the committee as is embraced in the first two sections and a part of the third. The amendment suggested has been consented to, and I have no objection to its being adopted to my substitute.

Mr. FIELD. The second question I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio is why not add the words "by the court" in the ninth line of the second section?

Mr. FINLEY. I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. FIELD. And the third question is why not strike out "Wallace's Report" and insert "Otto's Report?"

Mr. FINLEY. That has already been done.

Mr. FIELD. But not in the gentlemen's substitute.

Mr. FINLEY. It has been adopted to the original text, and I am entirely willing it should be adopted to my substitute.

One word further, Mr. Chairman. Now, bear in mind, you put this printing in the hands of the Public Printer. He is to hire additional clerks and workmen and purchase additional material in order to furnish additional volumes. We increase the salary of the Supreme Court reporter from $2,500 to $4,500, while we receive no additional service from him. The lawyers over the country may receive the benefit, but the Government does not receive any additional benefit. The only answer why the law should be changed is that the Supreme Court reporter, in letting out the printing of these reports, has heretofore made a royalty. Well, what of it? What difference is that to us? It does not cost the Government a dime more. We actually get his labor for $2,500 a year and receive three hundred copies of the report without cost to the Government. It is now proposed to saddle all this on the Government, to let the Government do the work and to pay additional salary to the Supreme Court reporter in order that lawyers may get their reports cheaper and prevent the reporter from making a royalty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The bill has been gone through and the substitute is now before the committee.

Mr. FINLEY. I now ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to indicate the amendments which he desires to offer.

Mr. FIELD. My first amendment is to strike out in the first section the words "and such other decisions as it may designate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FIELD. In the second section, in the ninth line, I move after the word "deemed" to insert the words "by the court."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FIELD. In the third section, I move to strike out the words "Wallace's Report" and insert "Otto's Report."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to say one word in reply to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY.] The only material change he proposes to make in this bill is to take away the power of Congress over the subject in having the work done at the public printing office and leave it a matter between the reporter and the publishers; and then he limits the price to $3 a volume. What is the effect of that? The effect of it is to leave it just where it is now, except that we curtail the price $2 a volume, which is a confession on the gentleman's part, from his large knowledge of public printing, that the publishers of those books and that reporter have been making at least $2 per volume more profit than they ought to make out of the country or the profession. The gentleman talks about lawyers, and says we are legislating in the interest of lawyers. I think it is not very graceful for a brother member, who is a lawyer himself, to talk before this House about lawyers in a way to stir up strife in regard to his own profession. But, admitting what the gentleman says; admitting that we stand here as advocates of the profession, I stand here as the advocate of the lawyers of the country, while the gentleman from Ohio stands here as the advocate of one lawyer, the reporter, and wants that reporter to put in his pocket the profits which I propose to distribute among the whole profession throughout the country. When the gentleman gets home I think he will find who is thought to be the friend of the lawyers. I believe the lawyers will tell him that he stood on the floor of this House advocating a great monopoly to enrich one lawyer at the expense of all the other lawyers of the country.

So much for that argument. As for what the gentleman has said about the cost, I have no means of knowledge as to what the work will cost precisely. I estimated it at $1.50 or $2 a volume. This book which I hold in my hand is perhaps twice as large as the volume of reports. Its cost is $2.61. Ten per cent. added to that makes the price $2.90. Now, if that can be furnished for $2.90 it is fair to infer the other can be at $1.50 or $2. Two dollars and ninety cents is the price of this book printed by the Government, in paper, type, style, and in every other way equal to the Otto Reports. I infer, then, that these reports can be printed for less than $2 a volume.

As to the three hundred volumes, the law as it is now provides there shall be 10 per cent. added; the three hundred volumes are to be distributed among all the Departments of the country according to the law as it now stands. That 10 per cent. over cost, as estimated by the committee, will bring back to the Government more than the cost of the three hundred volumes and will then pay the additional cost to the reporter. But my friend does not state it fairly. He says a reporter only gets $2,500 a year. The gentleman knows or ought to know that the law says the reporter shall receive $2,500 a year for the first volume and if there be more than one volume $1,500 more.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I explained yesterday that we give that additional $1,500, but I said the cost of these three hundred volumes compensates for that.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, but the gentleman stated just now, and wanted it to go to the country, that the reporter only gets $2,500 a year as his pay, while he gets $4,000 as a fixed salary, and all the surplus profits on the publication of these reports. The law, as I now propose it, will reduce his salary perhaps 50 per cent. or more, thus saving to the country, instead of spending the money of the country, this 10 per cent. profit required to be paid by the lawyers, and every one else, which will more than pay the increased salary and buy the three hundred copies. This is the first time during my long service with my friend from Ohio on this floor that I have seen him indifferent to the rights of the people and making himself on this floor an advocate of a great monopoly between the publisher and the reporter of the court. I hope the committee will vote down the substitute.

Mr. WAIT. May I make an inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WAIT. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that reports of the court of appeals of the State of New York are published and sold broadcast, everywhere, at $1.50 a volume?

Mr. LOUNSBERY. The price is eighty cents.

Mr. WAIT. I mention the price at which I have purchased them after paying the bookseller's profit upon them. They are published on fine paper, the typography is excellent, and they are bound in the very best law style.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. In reply to my friend from Connecticut, I will say that I believe it is the universal practice of all the States that the Legislatures thereof shall take control, and do take control of their supreme court reports. My State fixes the price at $5 because it wants to make a profit. It does make a profit. It sells the reports at a profit, and not at cost. New York sells its reports at cost, much less, I am informed, than a dollar a volume. And our Government, in taking control of this subject, is but following the example of all the courts in the country.

Mr. MANNING. I move to strike out the last word. I am not quite sure that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] is correct in supposing there is any great monopoly involved in this matter. I have taken the trouble to inquire into and ascertain, so far as was necessary, the facts to enable me to form a correct judgment upon the merits of this bill. I have learned what surprised me very much, and what doubtless will surprise the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] and many other gentlemen on this floor, that barely fifteen hundred copies of each volume of the Supreme Court Reports are sold in the United States.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Because the price of them is so high that they are not purchased.

Mr. MANNING. I think there ought to have occurred to the gentleman a sufficient answer to that criticism on my remark. If the price is so high, who is affected by the small sale? Who is interested in the fact that but fifteen hundred copies are sold? Why, sir, it is the very man at whom you strike by your proposed bill. If the price was three dollars or two and a half a volume, according to your argument, a great many more copies would be sold.

Now, the reporter of the Supreme Court is the man to be benefited by the increased sale which you say will follow a reduction of the price. The greater the sales the smaller the profits. That is the standard of business conformed to by shopkeepers all over the country. I think if the reporter of the Supreme Court is a business man he will consult his own interest in that way.

The fact being that but fifteen hundred copies of the reports are sold, there can be but very little room for a great monopoly. Of those fifteen hundred copies, perhaps only one hundred copies are bought by the State of Virginia. One hundred and fifty copies would be a very liberal estimate of the number of copies taken by the Old Dominion. Now, take the State of Virginia, or the State of Illinois, or any other great State of the country, and you will find that the reporters of the States, respectively, sell more copies of the State Reports than are sold of the Supreme Court Reports by the reporter of that court.

Now, in regard to the matter of getting those reports more cheaply, I do not agree to the argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] that we are here legislating in our own behalf, and therefore, as lawyers, should not legislate at all. I would be quite as willing to protect lawyers as anybody else, and would not hesitate to vote for legislation in the interest of lawyers, because, forsooth, I am myself a lawyer. But let me call the attention of gentlemen to an illustration. I do not know precisely what are the terms of the law touching the publication of the reports of the Court of Claims; but I do know that the Public Printer in this city publishes those reports pursuant to law; and I know, moreover, that the very first bookseller into whose store you go will probably charge you $5 for a copy of that report, when it is hardly half so large as Otto's Report, and is not comparable to it in execution. Still you can go to Mr. Otto and obtain a volume of his report for $4.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. MANNING. In a moment. Now, if $4 a volume is the price which Mr. Otto receives for a book executed in splendid style, and which compares most favorably with reports published in this country up to this time, better, I am sure, than Wallace's Reports, larger and more neatly executed, and you have to pay $5 for each volume of the Court of Claims Reports, although printed by the Government, and not so large or well executed, how do you reach the conclusion that you will be secure from the danger of high prices if you impose upon the Public Printer the duty of printing the Supreme Court Reports? He now publishes the reports of the Court of Claims, and those reports find their way into booksellers' hands who demand $5 a volume; whereas Mr. Otto, taking care of his own interests without any legislation, sells his reports for $4 a volume. I will now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MCMILLIN.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman if he does not know this to be the fact, that the Supreme Court reporter gets a royalty on every volume that is sold?

Mr. MANNING. Unquestionably he does. In order to appreciate the remark, however, we have to consider the number of volumes sold.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is his royalty—how much a volume?

Mr. MANNING. You will have to confer with the people who print the book or Mr. Otto; I am not advised.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And is not that royalty in addition to the $4,000 a year he receives from the Government?

Mr. MANNING. Unquestionably it is. And I will say this for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MCMILLIN,] that I am not now, and I hope I never shall be, in favor of paying the smallest sums to lawyers for performing professional services. I am not in favor of the lowest price for services on the bench or as a Supreme Court reporter. I am in favor of paying that sum which will command good talent, and secure the services of men who will perform effective work.

I did not intend, Mr. Chairman, to go thus much into this matter, but merely to record myself against this legislation. I believe that we had better let the matter stand as it now is. I will vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] because that seems to be designed to prevent any new and questionable experiment.

I now withdraw my formal amendment.

The question recurring on the substitute of Mr. FINLEY as amended it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 29, noes 106.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1493) defining the duties of the reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, and with a recommendation that it be passed as amended.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were read and concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, called for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 11, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WITHERS. By request I present the memorial of William B. Whiting, a commodore on the retired list of the United States Navy, proposing a confederacy of all the governments on this continent. I do not know to what committee it should properly be referred. I will leave it to your judgment, Mr. President, to state to what committee the memorial had best be referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of William C. Shimoneck, late private in the Third Regiment United States Infantry, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of the Kansas Freedman's Relief Association, praying for the passage of a law to allow certain goods to pass the custom-house free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOOTH presented additional papers in the case of the application of William H. Davis, of Oakland, Alameda County, California, for compensation for the destruction and use of certain wharves and warehouses owned by him at San Diego, California, in 1862, by certain officers and troops of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

UTE INDIANS.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Indian Affairs instruct me to report back favorably the joint resolution (S. R. No. 51) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado, and their removal and settlement elsewhere, with two amendments. As this is a matter of importance, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be reported subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendments may be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs is, in line 10, to strike out the words "and to obtain their consent to" and insert the word "for;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through a commission of five persons to be appointed by the President, or by direct negotiation, as he may deem best, to enter into an agreement with such of the Ute Indians in Colorado as have not, by acts of hostility against the United States or otherwise, forfeited their rights under existing treaties, for the extinguishment of their title to their reservation in said State, for their removal and settlement in the Indian Territory or elsewhere.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution. I prefer that it should lie over until we can examine it. Let it be printed. It involves a very serious question. I do not know how this measure is, but there are one or two bills which propose to remove the Utes down to the Indian Territory; and I give notice now that there will be bitter opposition to any such movement.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that we have amended the joint resolution so as to exclude that idea.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the joint resolution be printed with the amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I, of course, have no objection to that course.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us examine it. I prefer to have it examined. Once or twice bills have passed that we did not fully understand and I prefer to have the joint resolution printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word in reference to the matter before it is passed over. The Committee on Indian Affairs were unanimous in making this report. The two Senators from Colorado agreed with reference to it. The idea suggested by the Senator from Missouri is excluded from the joint resolution. I have no objection, however, if any Senator desires an opportunity to examine it, that it may go over until to-morrow morning and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All bills and joint resolutions, when reported with amendments, are printed under the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not a good way of doing business to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of reports from committees at the time the reports are made. It has only been done in exceptional cases; and now, as a warning, I give notice that I shall generally object to all such applications.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to thank the Senator from Missouri for his courtesy in reference to this joint resolution. I stated when I asked unanimous consent that it was important the joint resolution should pass before the holidays. It must pass both Houses, and we have only a few days remaining before the holiday recess. That was the reason why I asked unanimous consent in the hearing of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TELLER. The joint resolution as introduced had the cause of objection in it made by the Senator from Missouri. It provided that these Indians might be removed to the Indian Territory. The committee now have stricken that out and stricken out one other provision that I consider objectionable. There can be no objection to the Secretary of the Interior having an opportunity to negotiate and report. Inasmuch as these Indians are on their way here, will be here during the holidays, before Congress reconvenes, it does seem to me that this joint resolution ought to pass now, so that it may get through the other House and authority be given, if the authority is at all necessary. Then when the agreement is made, it must be submitted to Congress, and if there is any objectionable provision in it, it can be stricken out or it can be modified. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Colorado knows that I am one of the best-natured men in the world, but I do not think the RECORD will show that I ever did withdraw an objection when I once made it.

Mr. TELLER. I want the Senator to make a precedent of that kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 833) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes concerning taxes upon banks and bankers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 834) making appropriation for necessary repairs and internal improvement of the United States custom-house in the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 835) for the relief of Mrs. Sultana S. Farrell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SAULSBURY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 836) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 837) to donate twelve condemned bronze cannon to the Blair Monument Association of Saint Louis, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENDLETON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 838) for the relief of George P. Webster; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 839) authorizing corrections to be made of errors in prize-lists; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered, That the petition of M. P. Jones, and all papers accompanying the same, be taken from the files of the Senate.

Ordered, That the petition of Alonzo Gesner, and all papers accompanying the same, be taken from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. BOOTH, it was Ordered, That the papers in connection with Senate bill 1430 of the Forty-fifth Congress be taken from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

On motion of Mr. ROLLINS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the claim of Harriet Flagg, now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, it was Ordered, That the papers of Lieutenant Francis V. Greene be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the memorial of William H. Sneed, of Knoxville, Tennessee, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

I desire to state in respect to that order that in the expiring hours of the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress a verbal adverse report was made, but made in the absence of the evidence referred to by the original petition. I accompany the order by a petition stating those facts as the reason why I ask for the order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be granted on the condition imposed by the rules.

COMMITTEE MESSENGERS.

Mr. WALLACE. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to appoint three additional messengers to the Senate, who shall be assigned by him to the Committees on Revolutionary Claims, Private Land Claims, and Engrossed Bills.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I shall vote against the resolution. In doing so I am not opposed to the committees having this assistance from the force of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to be selected by themselves, provided that selection can be made out of the present force under the charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms; but I am opposed to any increase of the force under the Sergeant-at Arms, because, in my judgment, it is now sufficiently large. It is a little more than double what it was in 1860, and it is fully as large as we inherited from our friends on the other side of the Chamber when they went out of power in this body.

Believing that there is no necessity for an increase of the force of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and that such an increase would be improper, I cannot vote for the resolution in the form in which it has been offered. I am in favor of awarding to the three committees that have been given to the minority the right of selecting out of the present force such persons as they may desire to serve under the Sergeant-at-Arms in attendance on their committees. There are men in the employ of the Sergeant-at-Arms in harmony with the majority of those committees, and it is perfectly right that they select men in harmony with their own political views to serve as messengers to their committees. I certainly would not deny them that privilege but I cannot vote to increase the force of the Senate in order to extend that courtesy to the other side, when my own convictions are that instead of increasing we ought to reduce the force of employés now in this body. Therefore I shall vote against the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HULMAN AND FAIRBANKS.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 618) for the relief of Herman Holman and Crawford Fairbanks was passed yesterday. The object is to correct a single vowel in the name of one of the parties concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and passed will be regarded as reconsidered. The bill is again in the Senate, and the Senator from Delaware proposes an amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that wherever the name of Herman Holman is spelled "Holman" it be amended so as to be spelled "Hulman." The "o" should be "u."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the title of the bill be amended in conformity with the amendments made in the body of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title will be so amended.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. BAYARD, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

RIO GRANDE FRONTIER.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 53, a bill of importance which I think ought to be considered at once.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 53) making appropriations for the erection of suitable posts for the protection of the Rio Grande frontier.

Mr. MAXEY. The Journal of the Senate shows that a bill having in view the same object as the bill now under consideration passed without division at a former session of the Senate. The object was recommended by the President, by the Secretary of War, and by the commanding general of the Department of Texas. It passed the Military Committee of the Senate unanimously and the Senate, as stated, and went to the House, but, after reference to committee, was not reported back to the House, and of course passed out with that Congress. The pending bill was therefore introduced in the form in which it had passed the Senate before, and a full report of the Committee on Military Affairs, to which it was referred, accompanies the bill as amended by the committee. The report is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred Senate bill 53, making appropriation for the erection of suitable posts for the protection of the Rio Grande frontier, respectfully submits the following report:

A bill (S. 414) having in view the same object was reported favorably from this committee on the 11th day of December, 1877, and passed the Senate without division on the 31st of January, 1878, and was sent to the House the same day, but no final action was taken by that body during the Forty-fifth Congress.

The great national importance of adequate protection to the Rio Grande border, fronting Mexico, by sufficient military force and additional posts, was brought to the attention of Congress by the President in his annual message of December 3, 1877. The committee makes the following extract from said message:

"The revolution which recently occurred in Mexico was followed by the accession of the successful party to power and the installation of its chief, General Porfirio Diaz, in the presidential office. It has been the custom of the United States, when such changes of government have heretofore occurred in Mexico, to recognize and enter into official relations with the de facto government as soon as it should appear to have the approval of the Mexican people, and should manifest a disposition to adhere to the obligations of treaties and international friendship. In the present case such official recognition has been deferred by the occurrences on the Rio Grande border, the records of which have been already communicated to each House of Congress, in answer to their respective resolutions of inquiry. Assurances have been received that the authorities at the seat of the Mexican government have both the disposition and the power to prevent and punish such unlawful invasions and depredations. It is earnestly to be hoped that events may prove these assurances to be well founded. The best interests of both countries require the maintenance of peace upon the border, and the development of commerce between the two republics.

* * * * * * *

"While I do not anticipate an interruption of friendly relations with Mexico, yet I cannot but look with some solicitude upon a continuance of border disorders as exposing the two countries to initiations of popular feeling and mischances of action which are naturally unfavorable to complete amity. Firmly determined that nothing shall be wanting on my part to promote a good understanding between the two nations, I yet must ask the attention of Congress to the actual occurrences on the border, that the lives and property of our citizens may be adequately protected and peace preserved.

"Disturbances along the Rio Grande, in Texas, to which I have already referred have rendered necessary the constant employment of a military force in that vicinity. A full report of all recent military operations in that quarter has been transmitted to the House of Representatives in answer to a resolution of that body, and it will, therefore, not be necessary to enter into details. I regret to say that these lawless incursions into our territory by armed bands from the Mexican side of the line, for the purpose of robbery, have been of frequent occurrence, and in spite of the most vigilant efforts of the commander of our forces the marauders have generally succeeded in escaping into Mexico with their plunder. In May last, I gave orders for the exercise of the utmost vigilance on the part of our troops for the suppression of these raids and the punishment of the guilty parties, as well as the recapture of property stolen by them. General Ord, commanding in Texas, was directed to invite the co-operation of the Mexican authorities in efforts to this end, and to assure them that I was anxious to avoid giving the least offense to Mexico. At the same time he was directed to give notice of my determination to put an end to the invasion of our territory by lawless bands, intent upon the plunder of our peaceful citizens, even if the effectual punishment of the outlaws should make the crossing of the border by our troops in their pursuit necessary. It is believed that this policy has had the effect to check somewhat these depredations, and that with a considerable increase of our force upon that frontier, and the establishment of several additional military posts along the Rio Grande, so as more effectually to guard that extensive border, peace may be preserved, and the lives and property of our citizens in Texas fully protected."

The Secretary of War, under date December 1, 1877, in a letter addressed to the chairman of this committee, says:

"In my opinion the preservation of peace and order along the boundary between this country and Mexico is a matter of sufficient importance to justify a considerable expenditure of money. Not only is it important to protect the people of the great and rapidly growing State of Texas from depredation, but it is also vastly important that every cause of difficulty between this country and Mexico should be removed, to the end that friendly relations may continue.

"It is not necessary that 'defensive works,' in the technical sense of these terms, should be erected along the Rio Grande, but the proposition to add a number of additional small military posts along that frontier is, as it seems to me, worthy of very favorable consideration by Congress. Raids into Texas from the Mexican side of the line are generally made by small parties for purposes of plunder only.

"If our posts were increased so as to be within forty or fifty miles of each other, on the line from Fort Brown to Fort Duncan, a small garrison of infantry at each post, with small bodies of cavalry to patrol the intervening distances, might, I think, protect the people of Texas from these raids.

"This would require three or four additional posts on that line."

General Sherman, commanding the Army, under date March 31, 1879, says:

"I certainly will favor any proposition to build suitable posts along the Rio Grande frontier, because it forms a national boundary and is likely to be permanent. * * * It may be well to build a new post between Ringgold Barracks and McIntosh, and another between McIntosh and Duncan. Should more be needed, I should prefer small block-houses connected with the larger posts by the telegraph, which would give prompt notice of the coming of any raiding party. It surely is to the national interest that the property on that frontier be made so safe that men would be encouraged to settle up all the lands, and thus form communities strong enough to guard their own interests. You may always count on me to favor any plan which will accomplish this result. Now is a good time, because matters on that frontier are exceptionally quiet and satisfactory."

General E. O. C. Ord, commanding Department of Texas, under date March 15, 1879, says:

"As to the needs of my department, I stated to the Military and Appropriations Committees of the House of Representatives that since I had reduced the number of posts in this department I had been re-enforced with twenty companies, and had sent out three, and that having quartered one of the seventeen additional I had now sixteen companies without quarters; that at lowest estimates it would take an average of $13,000 to quarter each of these companies; that I wanted to build three new posts; could get along with, perhaps, two; this to cover advancing line of frontier settlements; that in past four years I had received scarcely any money to quarter my troops.

* * * * * * *

"You can say that in the last four years the frontier of the State within which it is safe for families to settle has advanced from one hundred and fifty to two hundred miles toward the Staked Plains and the Rio Grande, and a new line of posts along certain parts of this new frontier, and to protect it from reservation Indians on the north and from Apaches from Mexico, on the south, is necessary."

The statement is made clearly by General Ord, in the above extract, that he has sixteen companies without quarters.

Surely common prudence demands that these troops should not be thus exposed unnecessarily to the inclemencies of the weather.

General Sherman, in another portion of the same letter from which the extract herein is taken, and which is addressed to Mr. MAXEY, of the committee, says:

"I assure you that I have no intention to reduce the military strength a particle in Texas; on the contrary, the changes contemplated there will rather increase the force, by putting full regiments in place of such as have been there ten years and are reduced in strength."

It is manifest to every intelligent man, whether he has military education and experience or not, that wisdom and sound policy demand that peace should be preserved along the Rio Grande border; that the people along that frontier should be protected from incursions of Mexican banditti and savage Indians, which have so long cursed the border and a few years ago well-nigh depopulated it.

The wise policy of affording all the protection in the power of the Government, with its limited military force, which has been pursued for a few years past, had manifested itself in greater peace and quiet there than had been enjoyed for many years before, and a conclusive evidence of its wisdom is the fact stated by General Ord, that within the last four years the frontier within which it is safe for families to settle has advanced from one hundred and fifty to two hundred miles toward the Staked Plains and the Rio Grande.

General Sherman, appreciating the wisdom of this policy, gives the distinct assurance that he will not diminish but rather increase the force. General Ord states that he has sixteen companies without quarters, and that at lowest estimates it will take an average of $13,000 to quarter each of these companies. A simple calculation shows that the sum of $208,000 at the lowest estimate is necessary to quarter these companies.

The statement of facts given is the strongest argument.

For many years past, as shown by the reports of the State Department, by the messages of the President, by investigations under the authority of the House of Representatives, and by the report forwarded by the State Department to the Senate during the third session of the Forty-fourth Congress, in compliance with its resolution, it is abundantly and conclusively established that murder, robbery, and arson have been carried on along that border with a high hand by Mexican and Indian raiders.

It is hoped and believed there is a change for the better. The committee has reason to believe that the Mexican authorities are manifesting a greater disposition than they have heretofore exhibited to do what they can on their side of the line to prevent these lawless incursions into our territory, and that they are not only willing but anxious that the authorities of this Government shall keep such protecting military force on our frontier as will, with their aid, prevent raiding on our territory in the future.

Adequate protection of the frontier is the best security for peace.

It will encourage settlements, so that in a few years the strength of the settlements will itself go far toward effectually and permanently stopping these raids.

Besides, raids, and of consequence bad blood and collisions, once effectually checked, commerce along the border between the two countries will spring up, and commerce itself is a handmaid of peace.

In addition to the foregoing recommendations, I make the following extract from a letter from the honorable Secretary of War to H. B. Banning, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, February 19, 1879.

"SIR: In reply to your favor of yesterday, I have the honor to inclose a report of the General of the Army upon the subject of the establishment of additional military posts in the vicinity of the Rio Grande border.

"I am of opinion that at least four additional military posts along the line of the Rio Grande should be constructed, and recommend the appropriation of $200,000 for that purpose.

"General Ord estimates that at least that sum will be required, and I concur with him in that opinion.

* * * * *

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"GEO. W. McCRARY,
"Secretary of War.

"Hon. H. B. BANNING,
"Chairman Committee Military Affairs, House of Representatives."

Thus, in the judgment of the committee, the bill proposed is, from the standpoint of protection, peace, and commerce, a wise and economic measure.

Attention is also invited to the urgent renewal of his recommendation for this appropriation made by General Ord in his annual report to the General of the Army, October 1, 1879, page 93 of the report of the General of the Army to the Secretary of War.

Wherefore the committee reports back Senate bill 53, with such amendments as may be deemed prudent for the better protection of the Government, which amendments are shown by the bill as reported; and as amended recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask my friend whether any appropriation was made in the general appropriation bill for that purpose?

Mr. MAXEY. No, sir. The bill is for a special appropriation, was not embraced in the general bill, and the attention of Congress was called to the matter by the President in his message December 3, 1877, and by the Secretary of War, and by the commanding general of the Department of Texas, as shown by the report of the committee; and I will give some reasons in addition to those fully set out in the report why this bill should pass.

For the last two or three years we have had upon the frontier of Texas comparative peace and greater security of life and property than we have had since the State entered into the Union, growing out of the fact that the Government has furnished better military protection than we had had theretofore, and this protection was supplemented by that furnished by the State of Texas. I will read some additional reasons, as set forth in the report of General Ord, commander of the military department, October 1, of the present year, and found on page 93 of the report of the General of the Army:

Of the thirteen sub-posts, or camps, eight have been established in the district of the Pecos by the district commander, under instructions from these headquarters of April 30, 1878, with a view of making safe the mail-route and settlements in its vicinity, by forcing the Indians from that region, and keeping them out of it. The intended result has, practically, been accomplished. All Indians penetrating the country have been so hotly pressed by the troops as to prevent their doing much damage—only three murders by marauders during the year. Last year there were seventeen in the region referred to.

The good order in Mexico, and the cessation of raids from that country, has enabled a considerable portion of the troops, held in reserve to carry out the order of the President, dated June 1, 1877, to cross the border in pursuit of raiders, to be diverted for use in exploring our own wild country, and occupying the water-holes frequented by raiding bands from our own Indian reservations. Cut off from water, the Indians cannot traverse the country.

Statement of expeditions and scouts, and the distances marched—total, 40,100 miles; an increase over that in last report of 18,740 miles. The activity of the troops in field service is thus indicated at a glance.

* * * * * * *

By reason of revolutions the Mexican population along the river is of a mongrel character. Deserters from the contending forces; Mexican soldiery sent to the border and there disbanded; remnants of bands of wild, raiding, or refugee Indians, who formerly found safety in the deserts and unexplored mountains of Mexico or Texas, and who have gradually learned to trade and mix with the people of its border towns; and smugglers—all go to swell the lawless element. To such a population, ordinary treaties or modes of administering justice will not apply, especially when it is considered that under the treaty of extradition now in force the local district judges are commissioners to extradite, and elected by a population more or less liable for extraditable offenses committed on the opposite side. The conclusion is reasonable that when the existing treaty was made the character and number of the border refugees was not understood. Moreover, under its provisions neither country is bound to extradite its own citizens, and, generally, to evade the penalties of the treaty, citizenship to suit their necessities can be proven by offenders.

The country in the vicinity of the banks of the Rio Grande is peculiar, and as little understood as is the character of the people. Along the lower river, ascending to Camargo, it is a rich valley, thickly timbered in the bottoms, with sheep and cattle ranches inland from the timber. Thence to Laredo it is broken with small patches of good land. Above Laredo to the mouth of the Pecos it is a cactus belt, with streams few and far between, with little cultivation, except near San Felipe—there only by irrigation. The cactus belt and the plateau are well adapted to sheep-raising. Above the mouth of the Pecos to the valley of San Elizario and El Paso, where again there are irrigable lands, the river cuts its way through wild and craggy mountain ranges and along the beds of immense cañons. Between the mountain ranges are plains, valleys, and gorges, rapidly undergoing exploration on the Texas side, and found well adapted to grazing. The ranges are much better supplied with water than was supposed, and in proportion as they are explored valuable discoveries of precious metals result.

From the mouth of the river to El Paso the population of the border counties is, with few exceptions, Mexican or of Mexican origin. Americans are pushing west and northwest, and as soon as the new military road—much nearer the river—from Fort Clark to Fort Davis, now under construction by the troops of this department, shall have been opened quite a number of cattle ranches will be established near and north of the Rio Grande and along the Pecos.

I beg now to call the attention of the Senate specially to the following extract from General Ord's report, namely:

I need not say that it is very disheartening to the officers to be compelled through the cold winters and hot summers of West Texas to keep their wives and children in tents, shanties, or brush huts, or to have them packed in attics. The want of quarters for so many necessarily crowds all the others, and a glance at the amount of service—40,100 miles of scouts and expeditions, 18,740 miles more than last year—performed by the troops in a country like West Texas ought to secure to them some comfort after a return from their long and weary marches over trackless wastes. One result of such discomfort, even under rather favorable circumstances, is that of eleven officers who reached the department with four batteries of artillery only four remain, and only one of them has his family with him.

I have as earnestly as is consistent with propriety urged the necessity of an appropriation of $200,000 for four additional posts needed to replace those which have been vacated and others which it is proposed to vacate as rapidly as the larger settlements get beyond them or the protection of new settlements may require. The erection of four posts would provide quarters for the eleven companies now unprovided.

I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the following table showing subposts and scouting camps in the Department of Texas:

Subposts and scouting camps existing September 30, 1879.

The Secretary of War in his letter of February 19, 1879, states, as shown in the committee's report:

I am of opinion that at least four additional military posts along the line of the Rio Grande should be constructed, and recommend the appropriation of $200,000 for that purpose.

General Ord estimates that at least that sum will be required, and I concur with him in that opinion.

We have comparative peace along our border now, resulting from protection. The troops in that department have done this vast amount of over forty thousand miles of scouting in all sorts of weather and undergoing hardships difficult to appreciate by those not familiar with the frontier and its deprivations. They are without quarters, and it is an act of justice and humanity to these soldiers who are so well doing their duty to make suitable provision. I think there can be no question in the mind of any Senator that it ought to be done, and I confidently submit this bill to the judgment of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "of," it is proposed to insert "acquiring sites and;" and in line 6, after the word "erecting," to insert "thereon;" so as to read:

That the sum of $200,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of acquiring sites and erecting thereon such military posts on or near the Rio Grande frontier as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of War for the adequate protection thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is also proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That none of said appropriation shall be used for the purposes aforesaid until a valid title to said sites be vested in the United States: And provided further, That the State of Texas shall duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to assess or tax said sites, or any of them, or any improvements placed thereon for military purposes, so long as the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill making appropriations for acquiring sites and the erection of suitable posts for the protection of the Rio Grande frontier."

PETER GETERT.

Mr. INGALLS. I move the present consideration of Senate bill No. 341. It is a private bill reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 341) granting a pension to Peter Getert was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Peter Getert, of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $—— per month from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. INGALLS December 4, 1879:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 341, report:

Peter Getert was a member of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers. He enlisted November 12, 1862, and was discharged November, 1875. The records of the War Department fail to show treatment for any disease while in the service. He claims pension by reason of scurvy and rheumatism contracted while a prisoner of war at Andersonville in 1864. He furnishes evidence that he was sound and healthy when enlisted and at the time of his capture.

Two of his comrades testify to an attack of scurvy while at Andersonville, which soon after his exchange developed into extensive ulceration of the left leg, which has continued to the present time, accompanied by inflammatory rheumatism of an aggravated type.

The board of examining surgeons at Muscatine, Iowa, certify, June 5, 1878, that they had carefully examined Getert, and found him suffering from disease of left leg, caused either by scurvy or varicose veins. They concluded that his disability originated in the service of the United States, in the line of duty.

They fixed the rate of his incapacity at three-fourths; and concurring with them, the committee recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment in the sixth line by inserting the word "six" before "dollars" in line 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Pensions in their report, to insert "six" before "dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIRAM JOHNSON.

Mr. INGALLS. I move the present consideration of Senate bill No. 376, likewise a private bill reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 376) granting a pension to Hiram Johnson.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Hiram Johnson, late private in Company A, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension, from and after the passage of this act, for scrotal hernia, the rate of disability to be ascertained and determined by the Commissioner of Pensions under existing laws.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. INGALLS December 4, 1879:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 376, report:

Hiram Johnson was a private Company A, Seventy-ninth Illinois Volunteers. He enlisted July 15, 1862, and was discharged March 2, 1863, upon surgeon's certificate of disability, resulting from scrotal hernia. He applied for pension November 17, 1869, and his claim was rejected April 4, 1877, upon the ground that the hernia existed before enlistment. There is evidence tending to show that Johnson had scrotal hernia in childhood, but this appears to have been cured. The soldier was carefully examined at the time of his enlistment, and accepted as a sound, healthy recruit. This action on the part of the Government ought to be regarded as conclusive upon the question. The evidence is clear that while marching, in the night, in October, 1862, near Perryville, Kentucky, he fell into a ditch, and was so badly ruptured that he was compelled to retain the parts with his hands in order to continue the march to Nashville, where he remained in general hospital till discharged, as above stated. The disability has continued to the present time, but the committee are unable to determine the degree; the latest evidence on this point being the certificate of an examining surgeon in 1872, at which date his incapacity was rated at one-half.

The committee therefore report the accompanying bill, leaving the determination of this point to the Commissioner, as a substitute for bill 376, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY J. CHURCHMAN.

Mr. INGALLS. I move the present consideration of Senate bill No. 475.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 475) granting a pension to Henry J. Churchman. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry J. Churchman, late a surgeon in the Fourth Division, Seventeenth Army Corps, United States Volunteers, and to pay him a pension of $—— per month from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to ask the Senator whether these bills that we are now passing come from the Committee on Pensions, and whether they are recommended by that committee?

Mr. INGALLS. That is a very extraordinary question for the Senator from West Virginia to ask.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Whether it is or not, I do ask it.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator supposes that I am endeavoring to pass bills on my private responsibility here, he is entirely unfamiliar with my course in this body.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not know that the Senator's responsibility was greater than that of any other member of the body. The question, I think, was a very civil and polite one, and as much so as I knew how to address to a Senator. If the Senator thinks proper to answer it in an individual way, I cannot help it. I will ask the question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WITHERS. The chairman responds that all these bills reported from the Pension Committee are the unanimous action of that committee, and are recommended by every member of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, that is all I wanted to know, and I certainly had a right to ask the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that there is a blank in the bill, and no amendment is proposed by the committee to fill it.

Mr. INGALLS. The blank in the bill was purposely left by the committee, for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Pensions to insert the amount to which the pensioner may be found entitled after an examination as provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to submit a query, whether the bill will authorize the Commissioner to fill the blank by any sum whatever? It seems to me that the bill grants nothing to the applicant unless the language shall be changed.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill is entirely correct.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no objection to it. I only make the suggestion.

Mr. INGALLS. The Commissioner of Pensions has the right under existing law to order the beneficiary of the bill to appear before an examining surgeon for the purpose of ascertaining the degree of disability and the rate of pension to which he would be entitled. There was no evidence before the committee that authorized them, in their judgment, to pronounce the amount he ought to receive, and they therefore left the blank in order that the Commissioner might by proper medical evidence ascertain the amount the beneficiary ought to receive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the Senator having charge of these bills ought to make some explanation in reference to their merits before we are called upon to vote on them. Outside of the Committee on Pensions I suppose there is no person who knows specially anything about the merits of the claim of the party to a pension.

Mr. INGALLS. There is a written report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is all true, but we have been here but a very short time, and we have not had time to take up these printed reports and examine them. It would be a matter of very little inconvenience to the Senator having charge of these bills briefly to state the basis on which the bills are brought in, and we ought to have that information succinctly stated in order to vote intelligently on them. I hope, therefore, the Senators who propose these pension bills to our consideration will state briefly the merits on which these parties are entitled to relief.

Mr. INGALLS. The report is brief. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. INGALLS December 4, 1879:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 475, report:

Henry J. Churchman was a surgeon in the United States Army, who alleges that while with Sherman on his march to the sea he was injured by riding a rough horse, which caused urethral stricture, resulting in cystitis, which continues even unto this day, disqualifying him from participating in the active affairs of life. His claim was rejected at the Pension Office because the records failed to show the origin of the disability or its treatment in hospital, and that claimant was unable to furnish evidence, by affidavit of an officer or otherwise, that he was treated while in the service. Under the rules, the action of the Commissioner was correct, but the case appears to have unusual claims to equitable consideration. Dr. Churchman seems, from many testimonials on file, to be a gentleman of unusually high character and of most exemplary life. The evidence establishes incontrovertibly the fact that he was in perfect health prior to and at the date of his enlistment. He left the service in July, 1865, and the testimony of Dr. Carpenter shows that within one month thereafter he was treated for the diseases for which he now claims pension. He has since that time been continuously under the care of the most eminent surgeons in New York, Philadelphia, and Virginia, and remains an incurable invalid.

The only question for the committee to consider is whether the claimant did contract stricture and cystitis while in the military service of the United States and in the line of duty, and from the cause alleged.

All the other conditions necessary to establish his claim are satisfactorily proved, but upon this point the affidavit of Dr. Churchman is the only evidence. Had there been other proof, the case would have been admitted by the Commissioner. Under all the circumstances, the committee regard the claim as one which appeals strongly to the exercise of their discretionary powers, and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

WILLIAM B. WHITING.

Mr. INGALLS. I move the present consideration of Senate bill No. 751.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 751) granting a pension to William B. Whiting, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, under the class of persons who have lost the use of both feet, the name of William B. Whiting on the retired list of officers of the Navy, and to pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall not give my consent to the present consideration of that case until I first hear an explanation from the Senator reporting it. This, I understand, establishes the precedent that an officer upon the retired list drawing three-quarters pay, 75 per cent. of his regular pay, shall also be placed on the pension-roll. If it is to be made applicable to one, it must be made applicable to all. As I understand the cause of placing officers in the Navy and in the Army upon the retired list, it is on account of their disability; and the very cause and reason for a pension is thereby excluded. I do not think the principle is right that both a pension and three-quarters pay should be allowed to officers of the Army or Navy.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator hear the report read?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the report be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have examined the report recently and the provisions of the statutes. I have them before me. I have read the report and the section of the statutes. I should not have made the objection I did without knowing to what I was objecting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation on that particular point. My recollection is that the question was brought up in the Senate some years ago and objection made, and the Senate refused to establish such a precedent.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. INGALLS December 4, 1879:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of W. B. Whiting, report:

The petitioner entered the naval service of the United States as midshipman, February 2, 1829; was promoted to be lieutenant September 8, 1841; was placed on the retired list as lieutenant under the act of February 28, 1855, in consequence of physical injuries, for which he now asks a pension. His claim has been rejected by the Commissioner, upon the ground that the disability for which pension is asked did not originate in the line of duty. His physical condition is deplorable. While under verbal orders to join the Japan expedition, in 1852, he was thrown from a carriage, suffering dislocation of the spine, resulting in paralysis, which renders him a helpless invalid, unable to stand, and requiring the constant care of an attendant to lift him from his bed to a chair.

The committee are of opinion that the disability of which Commodore Whiting complains did occur in the line of duty, and the only remaining question is whether, being upon the retired list, he is also entitled to pension for the same injury which caused his retirement. Section 4724 reads: "No person in the * * * Navy * * * shall draw both a pension as an invalid and the pay of his rank or station in the service, unless the disability for which the pension was granted be such as to occasion his employment in a lower grade, or in the civil branch of the service."

The case of Commodore Whiting comes clearly withing the provisions of the statute. He was subsequently to his injury employed in a lower grade of the service, and, but for that injury, would have had full pay instead of retired pay, and would have remained in the line of promotion.

The committee therefore report a bill for his relief, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not object if there is sufficient explanation given in regard to it.

Mr. INGALLS. There can be no explanation of this bill given other than that which is contained in the report which has just been read. I understand the objection of the Senator from Missouri to rest upon what he conceives to be the state of the law, that an officer in the Army or Navy who is retired and is drawing retired pay, is not the subject of pension. Section 4724, upon which he relies in support of that position, is exactly in opposition to his views. It reads:

No person in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall draw both a pension as an invalid and the pay of his rank or station in the service, unless the disability for which the pension was granted be such as to occasion his employment in a lower grade, or in the civil branch of the service.

That is to say, if the disability for which the pension is to be granted does occasion his employment in a lower grade or in the civil branch of the service, then he may have a pension notwithstanding he is upon the retired list. The case of Commodore Whiting comes precisely within both these conditions. The disability was received while he was in the service of the Government, and in consequence of the disability that he received he was subsequently employed in a lower grade of the service, and has since become so entirely helpless in consequence of paralysis, resulting from injury to the spine, that he is unable to do anything.

It is clear, therefore, that under the most rigid interpretation of this statute the case of Commodore Whiting is plainly within the law. I trust that the Senator from Missouri will not insist upon any technical objections based upon the statute, because it was in evidence before the committee that the commodore is in a condition of great suffering and of destitution. This measure has been pending before Congress for several years, and it has been postponed from time to time upon the request of various Senators, notably the late Senator from California, Mr. Sargent, who urged exactly the same view now presented by the Senator from Missouri. In consequence of these objections relief has been postponed from time to time, and if it is postponed much longer it will come too late.

I ask the Senate to vote upon this question. It is a simple one. From my statement of the facts of the case, it is clearly within the statute, and I therefore hope that the measure may not be longer postponed, but may receive the favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Kansas, before he takes his seat, answer the question how many officers of the Army and Navy upon the retired list are now upon the pension-roll?

Mr. INGALLS. I cannot answer that question; it was not an issue in this case; and it is utterly immaterial to the proper consideration of Commodore Whiting's claim whether there is one or there are a thousand officers on the retired list. The only question is whether under existing provisions of law he is entitled to a pension, and not how many officers are on the retired list drawing a pension.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state, in addition to the very clear exposition of the facts of the case which has been made by the Senator from Kansas, that this is a case peculiar in its merits. It has been examined by the Pension Committee with great care on two different occasions, and the result has been a unanimous report in favor of granting the relief asked. It not only comes directly within the provisions of the law which has just been quoted, but the case is in itself one which appeals very strongly not merely to our sense of justice but to our sympathies, inasmuch as this gentleman has, in consequence of this injury, been reduced to the most deplorable condition possible to conceive. There is almost an absolute paralysis of his whole body. He cannot feed himself; he cannot move; he requires the constant attendance of another person to enable him to meet the requirements necessary to the existence of life itself; and in this condition, thus paralyzed, thus diseased, thus suffering, thus in penury, he comes before us with a case which presents every condition that is required by the law, and I am astonished to find that such hostility is manifested to giving him this justice, to which he is clearly entitled under the provisions of the law itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much is he now drawing?

Mr. WITHERS. I do not know how much he is now drawing. As chairman of the Pensions Committee it was not my duty to investigate the question of whether he was now drawing pay or how much. He is on the retired list, and the amount of pay provided by law for the grade which he holds on that list he receives, I presume. The question which the committee considered was simply this: whether this case as presented to us was of such a character as brought him within the provisions of the pension code. The committee decided unanimously that it did come within those provisions. The Pension Bureau, as the report states, rejected the case because, according to their conclusion, the disability was not received in the line of duty; they thought there was no proof of it. But the facts of the case show that it was received in the line of duty, for this reason: that no officer can be placed upon the retired list of the Navy for disability unless that disability was incurred in the line of duty. The case was investigated when he was placed upon the retired list, and it was decided by the naval board that he did receive the injury in the line of duty, and he was placed on that list in consequence thereof. Therefore that matter has been settled officially, and the committee believe correctly, the evidence before them being, to their minds, conclusive on that point.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Pensions to say to the Senate that no man can go upon the retired list except for disability?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir; I stated no such thing.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood that to be the proposition.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Missouri misunderstood me. I stated that no officer could be placed upon the retired list for injury unless such injury was received in the line of duty.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any evidence that this officer was placed on the retired list for injury received and not for length of service?

Mr. WITHERS. There is.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not so stated in the report.

Mr. WITHERS. It is not stated in the report, nor was it necessary to state it in the report; but the facts were before the committee to establish that he was placed upon the retired list for this very disability which then existed in comparatively a small degree, but which has been progressive from that time to the present.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have asked the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Pensions and the distinguished Senator from Kansas to tell me how much compensation this officer is now receiving upon the retired list. They neither one deign to give the Senate that information. We know by law that he is receiving 75 per cent. of the pay of the rank and grade upon which he was retired. We do not know that amount.

The chairman of the Committee on Pensions has said that the Commissioner of Pensions refused to grant this pension because the injury was not received in the line of duty. The report of the Committee on Pensions says:

> His claim has been rejected by the Commissioner, upon the ground that the disability for which pension is asked did not originate in the line of duty. His physical condition is deplorable. While under verbal orders to join the Japan expedition, in 1852, he was thrown from a carriage, suffering dislocation of the spine, resulting in paralysis, which renders him a helpless invalid, unable to stand, and requiring the constant care of an attendant to lift him from his bed to a chair.

That is the line of duty in which this injury was received. Probably absent, receiving a verbal order to report to some point for duty, he was thrown from a carriage, without the attendant circumstances of that injury being given to us; and it is called an injury in the line of duty!

I have asked each of these Senators having charge of the bill whether there are any other officers upon the retired list in the Army or Navy who are drawing pensions, and neither one of them will deign to answer. They dare not answer. This is a bold precedent; it is transgressing the rules of the Senate and the statute law upon that question.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator permit me? The Senator is mistaken when he says that neither of us deigns to answer. I heard him answer distinctly that the Senator from Kansas was not aware whether there were or were not such cases. I myself certainly am not, but I am informed by a Senator that there are several. Therefore it is not a bold departure from the existing regulations, and I think even if it were, provided it comes within the conditions of the law, we had as well establish the precedent now as at any other time if a case arises requiring it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have no names given and I presumed that the Committee on Pensions would be thoroughly conversant with this matter and able to give any information desired in regard to it.

Mr. WITHERS. I can give any information in regard to this case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to know, then, what officers of the Army and Navy on the retired list are drawing pensions.

Mr. WITHERS. Has that any connection with this case? I say I hold myself prepared from an examination of the matter to give to the Senate any information required as to the merits of this particular case. Now, I do not concede that it affects the merits of this case at all whether there are twenty or five who are receiving pensions who are also on the retired list; nor if I could give the names of all such persons would it affect the merits of this question. The Committee on Pensions are not accustomed to go into such extended examinations and ramify their inquiries so widely as the question of the Senator would seem to indicate. They confine their examination to the specific case before them, and if that comes within the provision of the law they recommend the granting of a pension.

Mr. COCKRELL. We do not desire the Committee on Pensions to ramble all over creation, but we do expect them to give us a reason why they undertake to introduce a new precedent here, and I charge that this is a violation of the precedents of the Senate, and a violation of the statute; and the late distinguished Senator from California, Mr. Sargent, defeated this very bill in one or two Congresses. This is not the first time it has been before the Senate and received a check.

Now, if the Senate has established the precedent that an officer in the Army or Navy on the retired list shall also be entitled to a pension, I have not one word to say in opposition to this bill. But if this is the first case, if this is to be the exception, I shall protest against it as wrong, as wrong to hundreds and thousands of the disabled soldiers of our country who are only drawing a few dollars' pay, and are just as helpless and just as poverty-stricken as any of the officers upon the retired list of the Army or Navy, and who are pleading for an increase of their pensions, but their pleas and their cries are not heard by the Committee on Pensions or by Congress. They in their poverty, in their paralysis, and in their distress, are entitled to as much consideration as the officers upon the retired list of the Army and Navy, and I for one propose to do equal and exact justice to all.

Mr. WITHERS. If the Senator from Missouri can show that the statute forbids the payment of this pension I will vote against it. On the contrary the very statute upon which he relies, the very provision which he has quoted, provides precisely for such a case as this, and it is under the provision and operation of that law that this pension is claimed.

Sir, I defend the Committee on Pensions from any imputations which may be made that they are influenced by any other considerations than those of justice and equity. We do not consider the claims of officers as superior to those of privates. We examine every case upon its merits; and the Senator from Missouri is entirely mistaken in his assertion that this bill has been defeated before this body. That is also an error. If the Senator would examine the facts connected with the case he would probably be a little more guarded in the breadth of his declarations.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the simple question before the Senate, raised by the Senator from Missouri, is whether an officer on the retired list is prohibited from receiving a pension. The Senator from Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Pensions, made the statement which I desired to make when I rose, that if the Senator from Missouri can show by the law that because a man is on the retired list, either from the infirmities of age or disabilities incurred in the service, he is prohibited from receiving a pension, we should like to see the law.

We have talked here about precedents. Without being able to name the cases, I can state that it is true that there are many officers on the retired list who likewise draw pensions. Why should it not be so? Suppose a man in the prime of life is stricken while in the line of duty with disability either on the battle-field or elsewhere, and he has to be put on the retired list. He at once loses a portion of his pay. Therefore, according to the Senator from Missouri, he ought not to receive a pension, although he has been so unfortunate as to be stricken from the active service and the pay of an active officer by disease or wounds incurred in the service; yet the pension law should not apply to such a case! That would not be equity even. It is not only not law, but it is not the equity.

Again, take the case of a man who has served long and is finally retired by reason of age. Age is one of the disabilities incurred in the line of duty. Age is one of the disabilities incurred in the service of one's country. When that disability becomes so great that at a stated period it is thought best by law to retire him to quiet and give his duties to those more able to perform them, shall it be said that therefore he is denied the benefit of the pension laws if in addition to the infirmities of age he has other disabilities acquired in the service of his country?

On every hypothesis and every mode of reasoning the Senator from Missouri is wrong. In his appeal for economy he is led into a channel in which he cannot sustain himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to correct one statement?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not doing this in the interest of economy; I am doing it in the interest of justice and right in this case and to the maimed and pensioned soldiers of the country who are only drawing six or eight dollars a month.

Mr. VOORHEES. Fetch up your maimed soldiers and see whether I will not go as far as you will. I have not generally been behindhand in that respect. But I do not see why Commodore Whiting should be denied the benefit of the pension laws because of others that are flying around in the mind of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BECK. I desire to have the Senator from Indiana inform us what pay this officer is receiving now.

Mr. VOORHEES. I can answer just in this way: I am not well enough advised as to his rank or as to the pay of the various ranks in the Navy to answer directly, but I can say that he is receiving the reduced pay of a retired officer. Because he is on the retired list he is not receiving full pay, and he is losing that part of his pay because of these injuries received in the service of his country. He is docked, he is discounted, he receives less money than he did before this injury, and this pension that it is proposed to give him will not make him equal.

Mr. BECK. I asked the question supposing that that would be one of the things which the Committee on Pensions would inquire into, because if he receives a couple of thousand dollars a year already he is not quite so much an object of charity as he would be otherwise. I should like to know that fact.

Mr. VOORHEES. In answer to the Senator from Kentucky, I will state that whether he be an object of charity or not he has received his injuries in the line of duty, and, unless the law says that he is prohibited by reason of being on the retired list, he is as much entitled to a pension as any man whose claim was ever presented to this Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me that section 4724, which has been referred to in the debate, on a fair construction of it, does not cover the case now before the Senate. That section is this:

> No person in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall draw both a pension as an invalid and the pay of his rank or station in the service, unless the disability for which the pension was granted be such as to occasion his employment in a lower grade, or in the civil branch of the service.

That evidently contemplates a person drawing a pension and still in the service in some grade at the time, and does not contemplate a person upon the retired list; and therefore the question asked by the Senator from Missouri was, it seems to me, a very pertinent one. If this gentleman was in the naval service, and was drawing his pay in a lower grade than that in which he was wounded, then he might draw both a pension and the pay of the grade to which he had been reduced by reason of his disability; but the section under consideration does not meet the case of a person who is upon the retired list at all, and therefore we may be establishing a precedent that may come home here to plague us.

I know nothing about this case except what has been stated here in debate; but we ought to be careful not to establish a precedent which may hereafter compel us, in justice to other persons in the same position, to give a pension to men who are now drawing their pay upon the retired list. It seems to me that the policy of the Government has been, when a person is disabled in the military or naval service from any cause, whether from age or inability, longer to serve in the line in which he has been serving, to place him upon the retired list, giving him a certain per cent. of his full pay, and that was considered to be a proper equivalent for the services which he had rendered. This section evidently does not contemplate anything in reference to a person upon the retired list. It is only a person who has been wounded in the service, and by reason of that wound is compelled to take service in a lower rank or in the civil branch, that is referred to; and under these circumstances he may be entitled to a pension, as well as to the pay of the rank to which he has been reduced. That is my construction of the statute, and therefore it does not meet the case now before the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I am sorry to differ with the distinguished Senator from Delaware; but if this case does not come specifically within the letter of the law I know nothing about the proper construction of the English language. It is true that the policy of pensioning officers who are on the retired list has not been adopted by this Government as a rule; but there are exceptional cases which are specifically provided for, in which this pensioning is allowable. This case is one of those exceptional cases. The evidence is conclusive upon the point. If gentlemen are dissatisfied with the policy of the law which permits this thing to be done their remedy is to repeal the law, and not make this man a victim of their hostility to the provisions of the law.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand this gentleman is a retired commodore, and as such receives $3,750 a year.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not know what he receives.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the pay of a retired commodore.

Mr. INGALLS. How much?

Mr. ALLISON. Three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars per annum.

Mr. BECK. Can the Senator from Iowa tell us how much the bill proposes to give him? I cannot find out what he draws now or what it is proposed to give him.

Mr. INGALLS. Thirty dollars a month.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask whether the committee regard $3,750 as such inadequate pay as that it should be increased, and if so, how much?

Mr. WITHERS. In answer to the Senator I will state that I think in the first place he is mistaken as to the amount of pay that is received by this gentleman, but that can be ascertained by reference to the regulations.

Mr. COCKRELL. The pay of a commodore is, at sea, $5,000; on shore, $4,000.

Mr. WITHERS. Then he receives three-fourths of $4,000, which is a less amount than the Senator from Iowa stated.

Mr. ALLISON. That would be $3,000. A commodore put on the retired list is likely to be put on at the highest rate of his grade.

Mr. WITHERS. In addition to that I would say that this claim is not predicated upon the fact of the amount he receives being greater or less, but upon the fact that the law does not make the amount of pay an obstacle to receiving pension. It simply provides the conditions in which an officer who is on the retired list may likewise receive a pension. Among these conditions nothing is said as to the amount of his pay. But if this injury was received in the line of duty, and if in consequence of this injury it became necessary that he should be employed in the civil service or in a lower grade of the naval service than that which he would otherwise have been entitled to, he is entitled to the pension, and both these conditions exist in this case. The injury was received in the line of duty; it has required his employment in a lower grade of the service, and therefore he comes entirely within the provisions of the law, in the judgment of the committee, and they unanimously report in favor of passing the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question, for I am certainly bothered on this section? Do I understand that the officer to whom this pension is proposed to be granted is now employed in a lower grade of duty than the grade he has in the Navy?

Mr. WITHERS. Not at present; but in consequence of this injury he was for a time employed in a lower grade of service, because his physical condition prevented his employment on the active list at his full grade. For years he has been absolutely incapacitated from discharging any duty.

Mr. LOGAN. Did that grade in which he was employed change his pay in the Navy?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. In what respect?

Mr. WITHERS. It changed his pay in this respect, that he was detailed for duty in some rather semi-clerical department of business which did not give him the full pay to which he would have been entitled by virtue of the increased rank he would have held if he had remained on the active list.

Mr. LOGAN. If that is the case, in my judgment his condition does not fill the requirements of the law. As I read the law—at least I gather this from it—where an officer of the Army or Navy has been so disabled that his employment must be in a grade lower, that is to say, so that he will not draw the pay of the grade he had at the time, then he may have a pension. Now, the employment of an officer or the detailment of an officer to perform any duty, no matter what, unless his rank is changed, does not change the rate of his pay; so that if this officer continued to hold his rank, it made no difference as to the detail by the Navy Department or by the Executive of the Government, his pay on the roll would be the same.

I understand the meaning of this law to be that where an officer is so disabled that his employment must be of such a nature that he cannot receive the pay of his grade he may have a pension. That, in my judgment, is the proper consideration of this statute. I merely asked the question for the purpose of understanding that particular point in this case.

Mr. WITHERS. My investigation of the case convinced me from the papers presented that in consequence of the injury which this officer had received he was placed upon the retired list and was subsequently employed in the discharge of duties of a lower grade than the one to which he would have been entitled if he had remained in the service, and the pay also. I would mention to the Senators who have had reference to that subject, that my recollection is that the pay of officers in the Navy on the retired list is fixed by the rank they held at the time they were retired, and that although they may subsequently receive promotion in rank there is no corresponding increase of their pay. It is simply a brevet advance in rank and not an actual one, and the pay of the officer does not correspond to the nominal rank.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I can show the Senator, if he will allow me, that that construction of the law would certainly be very unfortunate. It is a very simple thing to get promotion in the Army or Navy by brevet, as it carries no pay. That is no evidence that the party's rank would be increased otherwise than by brevet. In fact we find, as far as the Navy is concerned, that it has been common to promote officers to the rank of commodore. We have a long list of such cases, and we are told the promotion carries with it no pay. Then the fact that a person has received an injury that authorizes his retirement to the retired list, if by promotion by way of brevet he has been advanced in rank, would entitle him, according to the construction the Senator gives, to the retired pay of the higher rank and to a pension also. That would be a very unfortunate construction of this statute.

I understand the rule applicable both to the Army and the Navy to be this, that the pension-roll was made for soldiers disabled in the service of their country, and for officers disabled in the service of their country who are not entitled to be placed on the retired list. In other words, men who could not be placed on the retired list—for instance, volunteer officers of the Army—may have pensions; but the retired list was made for those in the regular United States service, both in the Army and the Navy, in lieu of the pension-roll, and their retired pay was given them much beyond the sum allowed on the pension-roll and in lieu of that. The theory of the law is that a retired officer is not entitled to pension, but his retirement is substituted for pension. The idea of retirement and that of pension do not go together. There is, however, one exception, and that is where the rank of the officer, by virtue of his wounds or disability, must be reduced; that is to say, where his employment must be such that his rank does not give him the pay it ordinarily calls for. The employment of this officer had nothing to do with the change of his pay. He drew the same amount of money that his rank entitled him to, whether wounded or not wounded. I mean the pay provided for him on the retired list. That is provided for all, applicable to all.

If you are to give a man a pension because he is on the retired list, and say that by placing him on the retired list his rank or pay is reduced, then you can pension every man who is on the retired list both of the Army and Navy to-day, because the pay of every one of them is reduced as a matter of course, for the reason that the retirement pay is only three-fourths of the pay of the actual rank. So by this construction every man on the retired list of the Army and Navy would be just as legitimately entitled to a pension as this officer on that construction of the statute.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator's construction of the law is a very remarkable one. There is certainly nothing in the law which justifies the construction that he places upon it. The law says nothing about reduced pay; and as to his theory that pensions were designed simply and only to apply to those who could not be placed upon the retired list, it is clearly untenable by the provisions of the section quoted, because it distinctly declares that officers on the retired list shall be entitled to pensions. Therefore his whole theory falls to the ground in the face of the specific provision of the law. The condition upon which an officer on the retired list is entitled to a pension is not made dependent upon the amount of pay; but simply two conditions are necessary, one that the injury must have been received in the line of duty, the second that in consequence of such injury he is unable to fulfill the duties of the position which he originally held, so that if employed he must be employed in a lower grade of service. That is exactly the condition, as the evidence in this case shows, of this gentleman, Commodore Whiting. At the time he was retired he was not a commodore, and the rank of commodore which he now holds is simply, if not distinctly by law so declared, a brevet rank; it assimilates it in this, that it is a promotion as to rank but involves no promotion as to pay.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to put a case to him that will illustrate my position probably more clearly than what I have said? We have what is called the Soldiers' Home near this city. A major-general of the Army is retired. He draws three-quarters pay, which amounts probably to $4,000 per annum. He is assigned to duty as governor of the Soldiers' Home. That is duty in a lower grade than the grade of major-general in the Army. Will the Senator say that this law can be construed on that account, because his station is lower, to give him a pension besides his retired pay? Will he say that is the meaning of it? Can that be the meaning of the law?

Mr. WITHERS. If the Senator desires an answer now, I will say that there is another condition precedent which the Senator loses sight of. Not only must the rank be less than the one which he previously enjoyed, but the disability which he incurred must have been incurred in the line of duty. If the law is incorrect in this, if the theory of the law is erroneous, the Pensions Committee are not responsible for it; they can only enforce the law as it stands, and after repeated investigation of this case, and repeated discussion of it, and the fullest amount of evidence probably filed in any case that I have had under my supervision certainly, these points are distinctly sustained.

Now, the remedy, I repeat, should be to repeal the law if the law is defective. If it is wrong; if the principle should be established that no officer on the retired list, either of the Army or the Navy, shall under any circumstances receive a pension, enact that as the law, and repeal the existing provision which prescribes the conditions and circumstances under which an officer on the retired list is entitled to a pension.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that the presumption of the law is that when a man is retired he performs no duty whatever. The presumption of law is that a man retired is wholly retired from service. Then, if the retired list is given in lieu of the pension-roll, and men on it are wholly retired from the service, there ought to be at least some degree of similarity between the pension-roll and the retired list. When a man is pensioned the presumption is that he is disabled from the performance of duty. So of the retired list. One is given to the soldier or the officer who is not entitled to retirement; the retired pay to the one that is entitled to retirement, and only in a certain case can he be pensioned. That is in a case where the man's station is degraded. What is the station? The rank. The rank of this man was not degraded. He holds the same rank on the retired list as he did on the active list; that is, the rank or station which he holds. The same rank pertains to him and the same pay, except that it is changed to the retired pay; but it means where he has been forced to civil service or where he is assigned, as he may be if he applies, to perform certain duties of a lower grade. In fact, some men who are retired are placed entirely outside of the pale of the law so far as that is concerned, so that they cannot be called on to perform any duty of any character whatever.

Mr. WITHERS. According to the construction of the law now made by the Senator from Illinois, this gentleman comes legitimately within its provisions. The facts are just these: This gentleman was retired from active service and placed on the retired list some years before the war began. During the last war, under the exigencies of the service requiring a large increase in the officers of the Navy, and Army too, according to my recollection—but the Senator from Illinois will no doubt be better posted in regard to it than I am—many officers were taken from the retired list and placed on the active list; and this gentleman who would have been thus restored to the active list but for his physical disability was detailed for duty in the Observatory, these duties having been previously discharged by and appertaining to a lower grade in the service than that which he had formerly held. Therefore, under the Senator's own construction of the law, the case comes precisely within it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator misunderstands me entirely. This officer was not retired on a lower grade. He was retired on his actual rank. The meaning of the law is this——

Mr. WITHERS. Look at the law.

Mr. LOGAN. I am looking at the law and you will find in your own report that the law is quoted in this way, which is correct: that no officer on the retired list "shall draw both a pension as an invalid and the pay of his rank or station in the service, unless the disability for which the pension was granted be such as to occasion his employment in a lower grade, or in the civil branch of the service." That is to say, where an officer is not wholly retired, where he is continued in the service and the disability occasions him to perform a lower grade of service, that is, where he himself goes on duty under the law, he may have a pension; but where he is retired and placed on the retired list, where he is retired with his rank and is not degraded, he is not employed in a lower rank or a lower station and he cannot have a pension. He may by application himself perform other duties that he gets other pay for. That does not degrade him; it does not affect his rank at all. If he is wholly retired from the service so that he cannot be called into service at all, I ask if this law would apply?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir; it would not.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, if it would not apply to a man who is wholly retired because he is so thoroughly disabled that he can perform no duty, I would ask why should it apply to a man who can perform duty?

Mr. WITHERS. Simply because the law so prescribes.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not so understand it. I think it would be a very bad precedent; and if this bill shall pass before this session shall close there will be a number of bills to give pensions to Army officers that are retired from wounds, disabled, totally disabled, some of them performing clerical duties and other duties. They will ask for pensions; and why not give them to them? Under this construction of the statute they are as much entitled as this man. If the precedent is once established there will be no end to granting pensions to officers who are retired, both in the Army and Navy, which was never contemplated by the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, we have asked information in regard to this matter which the Committee on Pensions has not been able to give. I find quite a number of the Senators disagreeing with the Committee on Pensions as to their construction of the law. I have asked the question as to whether any officers of the Army and Navy on the retired list have been pensioned. I have not had the names of any officers given to me yet.

Mr. INGALLS. I am able to give one now. The Commissioner of Pensions, in a case identical with this, I am advised, held that the law was as the committee now assert it to be, and granted a pension to Commodore James F. Miller, who was then upon the retired list. That information has recently come to me. I would say further, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me just one moment, that in the case which is now before us an application was made to the Commissioner of Pensions for relief under the law, and the only reason why it was rejected was, not because being a retired officer he was not pensionable, but because it did not clearly appear to the Commissioner that the disability for which he asked a pension was incurred in the line of duty. The Commissioner of Pensions never asserted that Commodore Whiting was not pensionable, but that he did not make out a case under the law which would authorize him to grant a pension on the ground that his disability was incurred in the line of duty. Had Commodore Whiting been able to establish to the Commissioner that one fact, that this disability was incurred in the line of duty, he would have been placed upon the pension-roll without the necessity of coming to Congress for relief.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, as I had started to state, and which the Senator has not answered, we are not furnished with any list of the names of officers upon the retired list of the Navy or Army who are drawing pensions, and with the precedent in their respective cases. We are not furnished with a statement of the amount of money which Commodore Whiting is now drawing monthly from the Treasury on the retired list of the Navy. There has been a controversy in regard to that.

Mr. INGALLS. I can furnish that if the Senator desires it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not in the report here; I am only speaking of what has been presented for our action. It is not definitely stated by the committee, as I understand, what amount will be drawn under this bill. I understood the Senator from Kansas to say that it would be $30 a month. I now desire to ask him, if this bill should become a law, whether this officer would draw pay as a lieutenant or not; or of what rank or grade would he draw pay; and whether a lieutenant of the Navy only draws $30 per month as pension?

Now, in view of the fact that we have not this information, I would suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the bill lie over until Monday, and I for one, whether the committee get it or not, will get the information which I desire. It can be very easily obtained; and if those of us who are offering opposition to the present consideration of this bill are mistaken, I for one shall certainly withdraw any objections I may have. I am satisfied that my objections are now good. The objections of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] I think, are good; and so those of other Senators, especially the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] I simply desire time for further investigation, and I ask that the case may lie over until Monday.

Mr. INGALLS. With the understanding that the case may be resumed on the assembling of the Senate on Monday, I have no objection to that course being pursued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that proposition? The Chair hears none. The bill is postponed until Monday.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. GARLAND. Senate bill No. 711, amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes, was reported on the 21st of last June by myself from the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. In view of the investigation now proceeding before that committee, I am instructed by it to ask that the bill be recommitted. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

UTE INDIANS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs this morning and to which I made objection. I simply desire to offer an amendment additional to those offered by the committee, and to which I hope there will be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 51) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado, and their removal and settlement elsewhere.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, namely: in line 10, after the word "and," to strike out "to obtain their consent to" and insert "for;" and in line 11, after the word "settlement," to strike out "in the Indian Territory or;" so as to read:

For the extinguishment of their title to their reservation in said State, and for their removal and settlement elsewhere.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I desire to offer an additional amendment. I move to strike out the word "elsewhere" and insert "in some suitable place not in the Indian Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH L. LEWIS'S WILL.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 2046) to authorize a compromise of the claims of the United States under the will of Joseph L. Lewis be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

ARSENAL PROPERTY AT CHARLESTON.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 26) to transfer the arsenal property in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute for use and accommodation of said school.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to inquire of the Senator from South Carolina if the Secretary of War has made any communication to the Committee on Military Affairs in relation to the propriety of surrendering this property?

Mr. BUTLER. He has; the matter was referred to him.

Mr. MORRILL. Is there a report made by the committee on the subject embodying that fact?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; the committee reported an amendment, which is made after having referred the joint resolution to the Secretary of War, and the Senator from Vermont will find that the transfer is recommended not only by the Secretary of War but by General Sherman, General Augur, General Hunt, and all the officers who have been consulted on the subject. General Sherman very cordially recommends it. It is only a temporary transfer pending the abandonment by the Government of this arsenal which has been occupied by troops, but they have been taken away. General Sherman is of opinion that it will be better preserved by being turned over to this school than by being left in charge of a sergeant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution and to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to lease and deliver possession, upon such terms and conditions as to him may seem best, for the use of or in the interest of the Government, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute, the property known as the "Arsenal," situated in the city of Charleston, State of South Carolina, together with all the buildings, rights, and appurtenances thereto belonging, to be had and held by said trustees for the use and accommodation of said school for such time as said lease may run, if not theretofore required by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such terms and arrangements with said trustees for the care and protection of said property during its occupancy by said school, and for the redelivery of possession to the Government when thereto required, as will best subserve the interests of the Government: Provided, That the Government shall not be required to pay for any improvements that may be placed on said grounds during the continuance of said lease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK SOULÉ.

Mr. BOOTH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 244.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 244) releasing Frank Soulé, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of California, and his sureties from liability on his official bond.

Mr. BOOTH. I move to strike out all after the word "service," in line 12, in the following words:

And the proper officer of the Treasury Department be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to dismiss any and all suits that may have been instituted and are now pending against the sureties aforesaid upon said bond.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And from any judgment which has been obtained thereon in favor of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eleven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 11, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. BAKER. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to make a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will yield for a moment to the gentleman from Indiana to report one of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Appropriations, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BAKER. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the bill may be ordered to be printed, and recommitted; and I now give notice that to-morrow, after the morning hour, I shall move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking it up and putting it on its passage.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I reserve all points of order.

The bill was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

SUPREME COURT REPORTS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to have read a letter which I have received in reference to the discussion which took place yesterday in the House on the question of the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not object if it shall not give rise to objection or discussion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It will not. I ask that the letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIR: In reply to your telegram of yesterday asking for the probable cost of publishing the opinions of the Supreme Court, I have the honor to reply as follows: Three thousand copies of the book, similar in size and style to volume 7 Otto's Report, will cost as follows:

Composition	$723 00
Press-work	220 50
Folding, gathering, &c	159 00
Paper	658 98
Binding	1,800 00
Total	$3,561 48

I find on looking over this book some engravings. I have not included in my estimate any amount for engraving, but engraving of this character costs about $8 per page.

Yours, respectfully,

A. F. CHILDS, Chief Clerk.

Hon. J. T. HARRIS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to call attention to the fact stated in that letter that it will cost for the printing of reports of the Supreme Court only about $1.18 a volume.

REGULATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. McCOID. I ask, by unanimous consent, to report back from the Committee on Manufactures joint resolution (H. R. No. 125) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and I move that the accompanying report be printed and recommitted with the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa gives notice, so the House may be apprised of the fact, that he proposes to bring back the joint resolution by a motion to reconsider. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. McCOID. The committee wish to have leave to report at any time.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. What is the subject-matter?

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. Congress, for promotion of trade and manufactures, and to carry into effect international treaties, shall have power to grant, protect, and regulate the exclusive right to adopt and use trade-marks.

That this amendment shall be valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to receiving the report and ordering its printing and recommittal?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. No; but I do object to this question being brought back under a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Iowa can report when his committee is called.

The report was ordered to be printed and, with the joint resolution, recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The report of the committee is as follows:

The Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred House resolution No. 125, having had the same under consideration, do make the following report thereon:

The joint resolution proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of great and immediate importance. The amendatory article proposed is as follows:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. Congress, for promotion of trade and manufacture, and to carry into effect international treaties, shall have power to grant, protect, and regulate the exclusive right to adopt and use trade-marks."

The occasion for the proposal of such an amendment, as is probably well known to every member of the House, is peculiar. Under the eighth section of article 1 of the Constitution Congress assumed the power granted by this amendment by the act of July 8, 1870, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights." That portion of said act material to this subject is as follows:

"Any person or firm domiciled in the United States, and any corporation created by the authority of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and any person, firm, or corporation resident of or located in any foreign country which, by treaty or convention, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, and who are entitled to the exclusive use of any lawful trade-mark, or who intend to adopt and use any trade-mark for exclusive use within the United States, may obtain protection for such lawful trade-mark by complying with the following requirements:

"First. By causing to be recorded in the Patent Office a statement specifying the names of the parties, and their residences and place of business, who desire the protection of the trade-mark; the class of merchandise and the particular description of goods comprised in such class by which the trade-mark has been or is intended to be appropriated; a description of the trade-mark itself, with fac-similes thereof showing the mode in which it has been or is intended to be applied and used, and the length of time, if any, during which the trade-mark has been in use.

"Second. By making payment of a fee of $25 in the same manner and for the same purpose as the fee required for patents.

"Third. By complying with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Patents."

Under these statutes it was further provided that such trade-marks should remain in force for thirty years, subject to indefinite renewals. The common-law remedies for infringement were also enacted.

In August, 1876, further protection was given to the grantees of trade-marks by providing for the punishment of the fraudulent use, sale, and counterfeiting of such commercial symbols by fine and imprisonment.

Under these statutes the United States has registered trade-marks as follows:

Trade-marks registered and fees received by Patent Office in trade-mark cases.

And has received in fees the sum of $211,750. Has entered into treaty obligations for the mutual protection of trade-marks with Great Britain, June 1, 1879; the Austria-Hungarian Empire, June 1, 1872; Belgium, July 30, 1869; France, April 16, 1869; the German Empire, June 1, 1872; Russia, January 27, 1868; Brazil, June 17, 1879.

The business men of the world have awakened to the fact that manufacture and trade require national and international control and protection of genuine commercial signatures to identify and distinguish property made and marketed by cosmopolitan tradesmen. At this juncture the commercial world is astonished to find that alone among the nations the United States has no power to grant, protect, or regulate trade-marks. This has been finally determined by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States at the October term, 1879, in the cases of The United States vs. Emil Stifflins; Same vs. Adolph Witteman; Same vs. W. W. Johnson, F. E. McNamara, and N. S. Reeder.

As but a limited number of copies of that decision has been published, and it is so able and comprehensive as to be incapable of a satisfactory synopsis, your committee has deemed it best to set out the entire opinion. [See opinion attached.]

This, then, is the occasion which has arisen for the proposed change in the fundamental charter of the Government.

There arises two questions as to the propriety and necessity of the amendment:

First. Is the subject of sufficient importance to demand of the States this additional grant of constitutional power to the General Government?

Second. Is it a matter of such character as to require the legislative control of the National Government, instead of being left to the local legislation of the several States?

In answer to the first question, your committee deem it necessary to add but little to the facts already stated in the history of congressional and international action upon the subject.

The following considerations may be added:

The paramount interest of the Government to protect the innocent purchasers of manufactured goods from deception, frauds, and countless impositions. The beneficial effects of encouraging the establishment and maintenance of good commercial character on part of manufacturers protected by law. The stimulating and energizing the trade and commerce of our own people, giving them equal chances with citizens of other nations.

Trade-marks are now universally regarded as necessary to business. They have grown into use with the growth of civilization and progressive trade. All manufactures, all kinds of business adopt and use them. They are the ensigns of honor and popularity under which business men ship their goods from State to State and nation to nation. And now our commerce challenges the competition of the most prosperous countries. We are fast becoming the merchants; and our ingenious, industrious, and enterprising people, above all others, need this commercial proprietary protection.

As to the second question, your committee regard this as peculiarly the subject of national legislative control.

Nothing could be more detrimental to the interests of manufacture, trade, and commerce than the unharmonious local and conflicting legislation which would necessarily arise if this subject should be left to the States. The interest and safety of all demand that it, along with the power of making war, peace, and treaties, of taxation, regulating commerce and coining money, of granting patents and copyrights, should be vested in the General Government.

No one State could adequately protect her own citizens, much less the citizens of other States. The mere civil rights existing at common law are insufficient and impractical. No criminal law of a State can be framed comprehensive enough to cover violations of the rights of persons injured.

The treaty-making power, of which this becomes an incident, belongs solely to the General Government.

The various countries of the world have assumed national control of this subject. Austria passed a law granting and protecting trade-marks December 7, 1858, with general provisions and penalties such as our present laws of Congress. Bavaria has had such a law since 1840. In Belgium trade-marks are governed by the decree of 1801, the law of 1803, and decree of 1810. Great Britain has the "merchandise marks act" of 1862. France passed such a law June 23, 1857. Prussia, Sardinia, Spain, Würtemberg, each have protective laws.

The subject is not local. A trade-mark is ubiquitous. It knows no State line. It is of the essential nature of a patent and a copyright, in the method of its grants, regulation, and protection.

In the interest of revenue and economy of government it is also an important national subject. It is a source of considerable revenue.

The Government has already received at the hands of grantees of trade-marks under the laws now declared unconstitutional $——. This sum must be refunded in justice to such parties unless the consideration for its receipt is made good by the adoption of this amendment and legislation under it.

All these rights are now suspended and await action. Many of the State Legislatures meet this winter, and may ratify the proposed amendment at once.

Your committee therefore, in view of these facts, regard this resolution of immediate importance and recommend its passage before adjournment for vacation.

OPINION OF THE COURT.

"Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the Court.

"The three cases whose titles stand at the head of this opinion are criminal prosecutions for violations of what is known as the trade-mark legislation of Congress.

The first two are indictments in the southern district of New York, and the last is an information in the southern district of Ohio. In all of them the judges of the circuit courts in which they are pending have certified to a difference of opinion on what is substantially the same question, namely, are the acts of Congress on the subject of trade-marks founded on any rightful authority in the Constitution of the United States.

"The entire legislation of Congress in regard to trade-marks is of very recent origin. It is first seen in sections 77 to 84, inclusive, of the act of July 8, 1870, entitled 'An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights.' The part of this act relating to trade-marks is embodied in chapter 2, title 60, sections 4937 to 4947 of the Revised Statutes.

"It is sufficient at present to say that they provide for the registration in the Patent Office of any device in the nature of a trade-mark to which any person has by usage established an exclusive right, or which the person so registering intends to appropriate by that act to his exclusive use; and they make the wrongful use of a trade-mark, so registered, by any other person, without the owner's permission, a cause of action in a civil suit for damages. Six years later we have the act of August 14, 1876, (19 U. S. Statutes, 141,) punishing by fine and imprisonment the fraudulent use, sale, and counterfeiting of trade-marks registered in pursuance of the statutes of the United States, on which the informations and indictments are founded in the cases before us.

"The right to adopt and use a symbol or device to distinguish the goods or property made or sold by the person whose mark it is, to the exclusion of the use of that symbol by all other persons, has been long recognized by the common-law and chancery courts of England and of this country, and by the statutes of some of the states. It is a property right for which damages may be recovered in an action at law, and the violation of which will be enjoined by a court of equity, with compensation for past infringement. This property and the exclusive right to its use were not created by the act of Congress and do not now depend upon that act for their enforcement. The whole system of trade-mark property and the civil remedies for its protection existed long anterior to the act of Congress and remain in full force since its passage.

"These propositions are so well understood as to need no citation of authorities or elaborate argument to prove them.

"The property in trade-marks and the right to their exclusive use, resting on the laws of the States in the same manner that other property does, and depending, like the great body of the rights of person and of property, for their security and protection on those laws, the power of Congress to legislate on the subject, to establish the conditions on which these rights shall depend, the period of their duration, and the legal remedies for their protection, if such powers exist at all, must be found in some clause of the Constitution of the United States, the instrument which is the source of all the powers that Congress can lawfully exercise.

"In the argument of these cases this seems to be conceded, and the advocates for the validity of the acts of Congress on this subject point to two clauses of that instrument, in one or in both of which, as they assert, sufficient warrant may be found for this legislation.

"The first of these is the eighth clause of section 8 of the first article of the Constitution. That section, manifestly intended to be an enumeration of the powers expressly granted to Congress and closing with the declaration of a rule for the ascertainment of such powers as are necessary by way of implication to carry into efficient operation those expressly given, authorizes Congress, by the clause referred to, "to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.'

"As the first and only attempt by Congress to regulate the right of trade-marks is to be found in the act to which we have referred, entitled 'An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights,' terms which have long since become technical as referring the one to inventions and the other to writings of authors, it is a reasonable inference that this part of the statute also was, in the opinion of Congress, an exercise of the power found in that clause of the Constitution. It may also be safely assumed that until a critical examination of the subject in the courts became necessary, it was mainly if not wholly to this class that the advocates of the law looked for its support.

"Any attempt, however, to identify the essential characteristics of a trade-mark with inventions and discoveries in the arts and sciences, or with the writings of authors, will show that the effort is surrounded with insurmountable difficulties.

"The ordinary trade-mark has no necessary relation to invention or discovery. The trade-mark recognized by the common law is generally the growth of a considerable period of use, rather than sudden invention. It is often the result of accident rather than design, and when under the act of Congress it is sought to establish it by registration, neither originality, invention, discovery, science, or art is in any way essential to the right conferred by that act. If we should endeavor to classify it under the head of writings of authors the objections are equally strong. In this, as in regard to inventions, there is required originality. And while the word writings may be liberally construed, as it has been, to include original designs for engravings, prints, &c., it is only such as are original, and are founded in the creative powers of the mind. The writings which are to be protected are the fruits of intellectual labor, embodied in the form of books, prints, engravings, and the like. The trade-mark may be, and generally is, the adoption of something already in existence as the distinctive symbol of the party using it. At common law the exclusive right to it grows out of the use of it, and not its mere adoption. By the act of Congress this exclusive right attaches upon registration. But in neither case does it depend upon novelty, upon invention, upon discovery, or upon any work of the brain. It requires no fancy or imagination, no genius, no laborious thought. It is simply founded on priority of appropriation. We look in vain in the statute for any other qualification or condition. If the symbol, however plain, simple, old, or well known, has been first appropriated by the claimant as his distinctive trade-mark, he may by registration secure the right to its exclusive use. While such legislation may be a judicious aid to the common law on the subject of trade-marks, and may be within the competency of legislatures whose general powers embrace that class of subjects, we are unable to see any such power in the constitutional provision concerning authors and inventors and their writings and discoveries.

"The other clause of the Constitution supposed to supply the requisite authority in Congress is the third of the same section, which, read in connection with the granting clause, is as follows:

"'The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.'

"The argument is that the use of a trade-mark—that which alone gives it any value—is to identify a particular class or quality of goods as the manufacture, produce, or property of the person who puts them in the general market for sale; that the sale of the article so distinguished is commerce; that the trade-mark is therefore a useful and valuable aid or instrument of commerce, and its regulation by virtue of the above provision of the Constitution belongs to Congress, and that the act in question is a lawful exercise of this power.

"It is not every species of property which is the subject of commerce, or which is used or even essential in commerce, which is brought by this clause of the Constitution within the control of Congress. The barrels and casks, the bottles and boxes in which alone certain articles of commerce are kept for safety, and by which their contents are transferred from the seller to the buyer, do not thereby become subjects of congressional legislation more than other property. (Nathan vs. Louisiana, 8 How., 73.) In the case of Paul vs. Virginia (8 Wallace, 168) this court held that a policy of insurance made by a corporation of one State on property situated in another was not an article of commerce, and did not come within the purview of the clause of the Constitution we are considering. 'They are not,' says the court, 'commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another, and then put up for sale.' On the other hand, in the case of Almy vs. The State of California, (24 How., 169,) it was held that a stamp duty imposed by the Legislature of California on bills of lading for gold and silver transported from any place in that State to another out of the State was forbidden by the Constitution of the United States, because such instruments were a necessity to the transaction of commerce, and the duty was a tax upon exports.

"The question, therefore, whether the trade-mark bears such a relation to commerce in general terms as to bring it within congressional control, when used or applied to the classes of commerce which fall within that control, is one which, in the present case, we propose to leave undecided. We adopt this course because when this court is called on in the course of the administration of the law to consider whether an act of Congress, or any other department of the Government, is within the constitutional authority of that department, a due respect for a co-ordinate branch of the Government requires that we shall decide that it has transcended its powers only when that is so plain that we cannot avoid the duty.

"In such cases it is manifestly the dictate of wisdom and judicial propriety to decide no more than is necessary to the case in hand. That such has been the uniform course of this court in regard to statutes passed by Congress will readily appear to any one who will consider the vast amount of argument presented to us assailing such statutes as unconstitutional, and will count, as he may do on his fingers, the instances in which this court has declared an act of Congress void for want of constitutional power.

"Governed by this view of our duty, we proceed to remark that a glance at the commerce clause of the Constitution discloses at once what has been often the subject of comment in this court and out of it, that the power of regulation there conferred on Congress is limited to commerce with foreign nations, commerce among the States, and commerce with the Indian tribes. And while bearing in mind the liberal construction that commerce with foreign nations means commerce between citizens of the United States and citizens and subjects of foreign nations, and commerce among the States means commerce between the individual citizens of different States, there still remains a very large amount of commerce, perhaps the largest, which, being trade or traffic between citizens of the same State, is beyond the control of Congress.

"When, therefore, Congress undertakes to enact a law which can only be valid as a regulation of commerce, it is reasonable to expect to find on the face of the statute, or from its essential nature, that it is a regulation of commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, or with the Indian tribes. If it is not so limited, it is in excess of the power of Congress. If its main purpose be to establish a regulation applicable to all trade, to commerce at all points, especially if it is apparent that it is designed to govern the commerce wholly between citizens of the same State, it is obviously the exercise of a power not confided to Congress.

"We find no recognition of this principle in the chapter on trade-marks in the Revised Statutes. We would naturally look for this in the description of the class of persons who are entitled to register a trade-mark, or in reference to the goods to which the trade-mark should be applied. If, for instance, it described persons engaged in a commerce between the different States, and related to its use in such commerce, it would be evident that Congress believed it was acting under the clause of the Constitution which authorizes it to regulate commerce among the States. So if, when the trade-mark has been registered, Congress had protected its use on goods sold by a citizen of one State to another, or by a citizen of a foreign state to a citizen of the United States, it would be seen that Congress was at least intending to exercise the power of regulation conferred by that clause of the Constitution. But no such idea is found or suggested in this statute. Its language is: 'Any person or firm domiciled in the United States, and any corporation created by the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof,' or any person residing in a foreign country which by treaty or convention affords similar privileges to our citizens, may by registration obtain protection for his trade-mark. Here is no requirement that such person shall be engaged in the kind of commerce which Congress is authorized to regulate. It is a general declaration that anybody in the United States, and anybody in any other country which permits us to do the like, may, by registering a trade-mark, have it fully protected. So, while the person registering is required to furnish 'a statement of the class of merchandise, and the particular description of the goods comprised in such class, by which the trade-mark has been or is intended to be appropriated,' there is no hint that it is goods to be transported from one State to another, or between the United States and foreign countries. Section 4939 is intended to impose some restriction upon the Commissioner of Patents in the matter of registration, but no limitation is suggested in regard to persons or property engaged in the different classes of commerce mentioned in the Constitution. When we come to the remedies provided by the act for infringement of the rights of the owner of the registered trade-mark, there is no restriction of the right of action, or suit, to a case of trade-mark used in foreign or interstate commerce.

"It is therefore manifest that no such distinction is found in the act, but that its broad purpose was to establish a universal system of trade-mark registration, for the benefit of all who had already used a trade-mark, or who wished to adopt one in the future, without regard to the character of the trade to which it was to be applied or the locality of the owner, with the solitary exception, that those who resided in foreign countries which extended no such privileges to us were excluded from them here.

"It has been suggested that if Congress has power to regulate trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, these statutes shall be held valid in that class of cases, if no further. To this there are two objections: First, the indictments in these cases do not show that the trade-marks which are wrongfully used were trade-marks used in that kind of commerce. Secondly, while it may be true that when one part of a statute is valid and constitutional and another part is unconstitutional and void, the court may enforce the valid part where they are distinctly separable so that each can stand alone; it is not within the judicial province to give to the words used by Congress a narrower meaning than they are manifestly intended to bear in order that crimes may be punished which are not described in language that brings them within the constitutional power of that body. This precise point was decided in the case of the United States vs. Rees, 97 U. S. R., 221. In that case Congress had passed a statute punishing election officers who should refuse to any person lawfully entitled to do so the right to cast his vote at an election. This court was of the opinion that, as regarded the section of the statute then under consideration, Congress could only punish such denial when it was on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"It was urged, however, that the more general description of the offense included the more limited one, and that the section was valid where such was in fact the cause of denial. But the court said, through the Chief-Justice: 'We are not able to reject a part which is unconstitutional and retain the remainder, because it is not possible to separate that which is constitutional, if there be any such, from that which is not. The proposed effect is not to be attained by striking out or disregarding words that are in the section, but by inserting words that are not there now. Each of the sections must stand as a whole or fall altogether. The language is plain. There is no room for construction, unless it be as to the effect of the Constitution. The question, then, to be determined is, whether we can introduce words of limitation into a penal statute so as to make it specific, when, as expressed, it is general only. * * * To limit this statute as now asked for would be to make a new law, not to enforce an old one. This is no part of our duty.' If we should, in the case before us, undertake to make by judicial construction a law which Congress did not make, it is quite probable we should do what, if the matter were now before that body, it would be unwilling to do, namely, make a trade-mark law which is only partial in its operation, and which would complicate the rights which parties would hold, in some instances under the act of Congress and in others under State law. (Cooley on Cons. Limitation, 178, 179; Commonwealth vs. Hitchings, 5 Gray, 485.

"In what we have here said we wish to be understood as leaving the whole question of the treaty-making power of the General Government over trade-marks and the duty of Congress to pass any laws necessary to carry such treaties into effect untouched.

"While we have, in our references in this opinion in the trade-mark legislation of Congress, had mainly in view the act of 1870, and the civil remedy which that act provided, it was because the criminal offenses described in the act of 1876 are, by their express terms, solely referable to frauds, counterfeits, and unlawful use of trade-marks which have been registered under the provisions of the former act. If that act is unconstitutional, so that the registration under it confers no lawful right, then the criminal enactment intended to protect that right falls with it.

"The questions in each of these cases, being an inquiry whether these statutes can be upheld in whole or in part as valid and constitutional, must be answered in the negative, and it will be so certified to the proper circuit courts."

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the delegates to the National Board of Trade, now in session in this city, be admitted to the privilege of the floor of the House during the remainder of their stay in this city.

Mr. WILSON. There is also a river commission in this city, composed of half a dozen of gentlemen from various parts of the United States, and I ask that they also be allowed admission to the floor of the House.

Mr. AIKEN. I object.

SOLICITOR AND JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2788) to authorize the President to detail an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of solicitor and judge-advocate-general, &c., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN K. DIXON.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2789) honorably mustering out of the service John K. Dixon, late a private Company K, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask by unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations and its sub-committees have leave to sit on the business of that committee during the sittings of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DEALERS IN LEAF-TOBACCO.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask by unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for action at this time:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to this House any information in the possession of that Department showing the number of licensed dealers in leaf-tobacco and the amount of internal revenue collected from such dealers during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, under and by virtue of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, specifying separately the number of retail dealers in leaf-tobacco and the amount of revenue received from such dealers.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think that resolution should go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It only asks for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects to action on the resolution at this time, and if there be no objection it will be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. Under the rule, if referred to that committee report will have to be made upon it within six days.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not wish it to be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, as it is simply a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no other course to suggest as the gentleman from Minnesota now objects to the present consideration of the resolution, and unless the gentleman consents to its reference it will not be before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let it be referred, then, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The resolution was received, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

COLORED EXODUS.

Mr. SHELLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas large numbers of citizens of certain States of the Union have been induced through the false representations and machinations of certain persons to leave their homes for the purpose of emigrating to other States; and

Whereas said persons so emigrating have failed for want of funds to reach their destination, and have become a charge upon the several communities where they have been compelled to stop in their journey, being without food or proper clothing in many instances: Therefore,

Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed to investigate the causes of said emigration and report such measures to this House as will afford the relief the exigencies of the case demand, and that said committee have leave to sit during the recess of Congress, have the right to send for persons and papers, and employ a stenographer; the expenses of said committee to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, upon vouchers filed by the chairman thereof.

FRAUDULENT CLAIMS.

Mr. MANNING. I desire to introduce the following resolution of inquiry and to ask for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report for the year 1877, referring to the payment of claims against the Government, said "most of these claims are paid out of what are classed as permanent annual appropriations contained in section 3689, Revised Statutes, which do not come under the annual supervision of Congress. These appropriations, though declared to be annual, have been used for the payment of claims, however old, including nearly every case of fraudulent or exaggerated claims paid by this Department:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House what fraudulent claims have been paid by the Treasury Department from the appropriations authorized by section 3689, Revised Statutes, and what fraudulent claims, if any, have been paid from other appropriations since June 22, 1874, up to and including the date of his said annual report; the amount and date of each fraudulent claim paid during the time above mentioned, specifying the appropriation from which paid, the nature of each claim, to whom paid, and what recommendations have been made or action taken or ordered by the Treasury Department to recover any money thus paid, with the date of such recommendations, action, or orders, and a statement of the result, if any, of such recommendations, actions, or orders in each case; and also to furnish this House with the evidence upon which said statement of fraud is predicated.

Mr. CALKINS. Members here have only been able to hear in the confusion a sentence or two of that resolution, and I think at least before the question is put to the House the resolution should be again read. I reserve my right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman shall lose no right.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. To the exclusion of this resolution?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think we should have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Let the resolution be referred, and it can come back within six days under the rule, being a resolution for information from one of the Departments.

Mr. MANNING. I have no other course left me, although I should like to have the resolution considered at this moment. I regard it as of great importance, and I do not see why there should be any objection from any quarter to its adoption at this time.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There will be objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, whatever committee the resolution is referred to will be compelled to report it back within one week.

Mr. MANNING. Very well. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The resolution was so referred.

PRINTING FOR LAND COMMISSION.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Printing. The committee have had under consideration the joint resolution referred to them (H. R. No. 143) authorizing certain printing for the land commission, and have unanimously directed me to report a substitute (H. R. No. 145) therefor, with the recommendation that it do pass. I ask the Clerk to read the proposed substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution authorizing certain printing for the land commission.

Be it resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to print, upon requisition of the chairman of the public land commission, created by the act of March 3, 1879, for the purpose of codifying the laws relating to the public lands, and for other purposes, such letters, testimony, and documents as may be necessary for the performance of the duties prescribed for said commission: Provided, That the cost of such printing shall not exceed the sum of $2,000: Provided further, That the number of copies printed of said letters, testimony, and documents shall not exceed two hundred.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If necessary, I will make a brief explanation in regard to this resolution. I do not know that an explanation is really necessary. On the 3d of March last a commission was raised for the purpose of codifying the land laws. They have taken a great deal of testimony, and it is very important it should be printed to aid them in the work they have to accomplish. Unless this is done it will be almost impossible for them to do that work within the prescribed time. This is an appropriation of $2,000 for that purpose.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ACKLEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 146) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission of engineers to examine the surveys of the contemplated canal across the Isthmus of Panama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 618) for the relief of Herman Hulman and Crawford Fairbanks, of the city of Terre Haute, Indiana; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now insist on the demand for the regular order.

UNLADING OF FOREIGN VESSELS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty-five minutes past twelve o'clock. The unfinished business coming over from yesterday is the bill (H. R. No. 2786) relating to the unlading of foreign vessels, reported by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WAIT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.]

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on yesterday objected to the bill now under consideration that it would interfere with the American shipping interests, and that it would seriously prejudice the coastwise trade if it should become a law. I think that the bill is simply the practical solution of a very interesting question.

It is hardly probable, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, that a vessel entering at the port of New Orleans would be likely to proceed up to the different ports of delivery on the Mississippi River to discharge its cargo. It would be hardly probable that a vessel would be put to such an expense. The same reasoning would be equally good as applied to the coastwise trade. I cannot see under those circumstances why objections should be urged to the passage of this joint resolution on such grounds. It is true that it is somewhat of an innovation upon the old law of 1799, but it is an innovation that will result in practical good. I think, Mr. Speaker, that under those circumstances there should be no objection to the passage of this joint resolution, which has received the unanimous support of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DUNNELL. I understood yesterday that the gentleman from Connecticut having this bill in charge was quite willing it should be recommitted and printed; and I think that was the understanding come to. This seems to me a very important bill, and I am unwilling to vote on it until I see it in print, and until it has been fully discussed.

The SPEAKER. There was an interchange of suggestions about the printing and recommitment of the bill, but no understanding was come to. The House is bound by action, not by debate.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill presents a single question which is easily comprehended, and the committee has agreed to recommend its passage as it is now reported. If the House does not desire it, it may as well vote it down now as at any other time. If the House does desire it, let it pass the bill now.

The only question that arises upon the bill is this: Under the law as it now stands, a vessel importing goods discharges its cargo at the port at which it first arrives. The object of this bill is to enable the vessels bringing cargoes to more ports than one to discharge cargo at the ports to which the merchandise is consigned. It does not authorize any interference with the coasting trade, as recognized by our present legislation, to the extent of permitting such vessels to take up merchandise at one American port and carry it to another. They cannot do that. It is only a question of whether they may discharge cargo at more ports than one. The reason for that is so easily understood that further investigation is not necessary, it seems to me, to determine whether the House shall assent to this proposition or not.

A vessel may have consignments of goods to Baltimore and to Norfolk. If she arrives, as the law is now, first at Norfolk the entire cargo must be discharged at Norfolk and the consignees of the portion of the cargo for Baltimore would be required to pay the charges for storage and reshipment and freight to Baltimore, which would be added to the cost of transportation. Now, if the vessel as is proposed by this bill be enabled to discharge the part of her cargo consigned to Norfolk at that port, and the part of the cargo consigned to Baltimore at that port, this saves to the consignees the expenses connected with a reshipment of the cargo designed for the second port. I mention these two ports merely by way of illustration.

It was urged yesterday that under the provisions of this bill a cargo consigned to different ports on the Mississippi and its tributaries might pass along up the Mississippi River. Now we understand that practically foreign vessels coming from foreign ports, loaded with cargoes for this country, are generally consigned to the most convenient external ports of the country. It is not to be supposed that they will incur the expense and the danger of navigation in order to pass into the interior waters of the country to discharge their cargoes there. Therefore, while that may be a possible thing it is not at all a probable thing.

The proposition here is simply to relieve, to the extent proposed by this bill, the commerce of our country from some of the burdens now imposed upon it. If there is a subject which above all others should command the serious attention of this House, it is the commercial condition of this country and its commercial interests. This is a small step but a proper one in the direction of cheapening commerce to our people, without interfering with the coast trade proper. Under this bill no foreign vessel can take up merchandise at one American port and carry it to another. All the power given under this bill is simply to enable such foreign vessels to discharge the cargoes brought from foreign countries at the different ports to which such cargoes may be consigned.

A vessel may come with consignments of cargo to Boston and New York. Under the law as it now stands, when that vessel arrives at the port of Boston, for instance, it must discharge its entire cargo there, and then may have to go to New York in ballast, while the consignees of the New York portion of the cargo will have to meet the expense of storage in Boston and reshipment from Boston to New York.

I have stated all there is in this bill. I understand very well that there is a strong feeling against any interference with the law which secures to American vessels the coastwise trade of the United States. We do not propose by this bill to take away that trade at all, to attack it in any degree. We propose only to change the law so as to cheapen the commerce of the country and to save to our people the expenses of reshipment of foreign merchandise to a second port.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The law as it now stands deprives foreign-built vessels of the American coast trade. Such foreign-built vessels already command three-fourths of the carrying trade of the United States. All the reservation which we have against foreign-built vessels is the law preventing their engaging in this enormous traffic along the coast of the United States.

This bill strikes a blow at the advantages now possessed by American vessels in regard to our coast trade, which advantages are held exclusively in the hands of the owners of American shipping. It is a small step, it is true, as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. REAGAN] has said; but it is a dangerous step, and an innovation which I for one will never consent to.

It is proposed in this bill that a foreign-built vessel may discharge a part of its cargo at one port of the United States and then proceed to a neighboring port and discharge the remainder of such cargo. In other words, it is in direct contravention of the statute providing against that very thing.

But I have another objection to this bill. It does not come before the House in the proper manner. In the first place, it should have never been referred to the Committee on Commerce; the subject of the bill is not one coming within the jurisdiction of that committee. It is not their province to consider a question of this character.

Secondly, this bill has never been printed, and members of this House have had no opportunity to examine it. Until that opportunity is given, and we can look at the bill and examine carefully all of its bearings upon this important question of the advantages possessed by American tonnage as against foreign tonnage, I certainly will not consent to its consideration.

Mr. DUNNELL. I had intended myself to raise the point which has been raised by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] that this very important measure comes before the House upon a written bill. From what was said in the debate yesterday, I certainly expected that this bill would be printed in the RECORD of this morning. But for some reason or other it is not even printed in the RECORD. Now I am not willing to vote for a bill of this magnitude which is not printed, and which comes before us in this irregular manner.

We have lived under the present law for more than eighty years. The Secretary of the Treasury speaks of the benefits resulting to the coastwise trade of the United States under the operations of the present law. Now, after we have lived under that law for eighty years, because of a little hardship which may have been felt at New London, it is proposed to repeal this old law, and not so much as to bring in a printed bill for consideration by this House.

Now, I have very great respect for the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. WAIT;] but I must insist that this is too important a measure—one affecting, and perhaps very much more than the gentleman himself now apprehends, the revenues of the country and the shipping interests of the country—to be brought in here and pressed for consideration without a printed bill, and even without a report.

I hope the gentleman will consent that this bill be recommitted and printed, and that it shall come before us at the proper time, when we can consider it fully and pass upon it intelligently. There is no necessity for any hurry in the passage of this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the view presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] raises the only question before the House in connection with this bill. He assumes that it is a blow at the interests of American ship-owners. Surely, if the law now gives to American ship-owners the monopoly of the entire coastwise shipping of this country, this bill does not interfere with that. But the law as it now stands operates not merely to give a monopoly of the coasting trade to American ship-owners, but it operates to compel consignees to consent to an expensive reshipment at their own cost for the benefit of ship-owners. There would be no more justice in retaining the present provision in this respect or in defeating the bill now before us than there would be in passing a law declaring that on consignment of goods to more than one port in this country the Government should give a direct benefit to American ship-owners to the extent of the price of the carriage of those goods from one port to another. This is one of those unjust and odious discriminations against the interests of the great body of the people which clog and load down and cripple our commerce so as to have driven our mercantile marine from the ocean. I trust the time has come when an enlightened and just policy, based upon consideration of public interest and justice, shall control in the legislation of this country, and when our legislation is not to be employed in securing and perpetuating monopolies for the benefit of a few at the expense of the many. That is precisely the question which comes up now.

I wish to repeat that the bill does not interfere with the coastwise trade in its ordinary sense. It does not permit any foreign-built vessel to take up commerce at one port of the United States and convey it to another. Its only object is to save to consignees the expense of a second shipment of cargoes consigned to more than one port in this country by one ship.

So far as concerns reprinting the bill I have no objection, if the gentleman from Connecticut prefers that course, though for my own part I am ready to vote now.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I expressed yesterday my objections to this bill, so sweeping in its nature and so utterly demoralizing to the interests of American ship-owners and shippers, and all for the purpose of facilitating the transfer of goods from New London to Norwich, a distance of thirteen miles. I will join with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] in the passage of a bill that shall give all opportunity to foreign or domestic vessels in making that perilous journey between New London and Norwich. [Laughter.]

But, sir, when the gentleman from Connecticut introduces a bill that we have not seen in print, the purport of which we must catch from hearing it read or from examining it as we may; when I find that this bill affects, in my judgment seriously, the coasting trade; when this view is fortified by a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, asserting that the bill may materially affect the coasting trade; when I do know that it may affect the transportation upon the entire Mississippi, upon the Hudson, upon any river capable of floating foreign ships that come to our ports of entry; when I know that it may affect the transportation from British North America to the United States on the chain of lakes and other waters a thousand miles in extent; when I know, as every man knows, that our shipping interest not only on the ocean but on the rivers and on the lakes has within the last few years been depressed, almost destroyed; when I know that the value of steamboats, barges, schooners, and barks on our lakes has fallen below the cost of construction, or even the cost of repair, it does seem to me that within the first three months in which there has been a revival of that business in which shippers at home and abroad owning American ships begin to have some relief, to pass such a bill as this in this hurried manner would be suicidal.

Sir, I marvel of all things that the gentleman placed at the head of the Committee on Commerce, who should be sensitive, who should be bold, who should be determined in the protection which his course here may give to American commerce, advocates as chairman of that committee the free-trader's doctrine and would for the sake of a few foreign ships ruin still further American shipping and American commerce in American bottoms.

How sad it seemed to me to hear the chairman of the Committee on Commerce bewail the loss that would accrue to foreign ship-owners if this bill should not pass. I have forgotten the duty of a committee on commerce if it be not to protect American commerce, American navigation, American shipping, American ship-owners—to do all it can to bring back to this country its destroyed commerce and carrying trade and not to hold out inducements to foreign ships which are not permitted to American ships.

Let this bill be printed; let it be considered; give members an opportunity to know what it is, what its effect will be. Give to gentlemen who live along the Mississippi, along our great lakes, along our internal waters, an opportunity to know what their constituents may desire in regard to such a bill as this, which gives to the foreign ship-owner privileges which are denied to our own people.

Mr. MCLANE. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan, and also of the gentleman from New York, to the fact that this bill does not permit a vessel to go from one port of entry to another port of entry. It simply authorizes a vessel that is duly entered at a port of entry to go and unload at a port of delivery within the same collection district.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that. If the gentleman had listened to my remarks yesterday he would have seen that I gave the greatest force to that proposition when I said that on the Mississippi River New Orleans was the port of entry, and all other ports—and I mentioned them by name—except Natchez, are ports of delivery only; Memphis, Vicksburgh, Saint Louis, and, on the Ohio, Louisville and Cincinnati, are all ports of delivery. If, then, a foreign vessel could navigate the Mississippi and the Ohio, it might be loaded with freight for every single port on those rivers, and, entering at New Orleans, it could carry that freight and deliver it to every one of those ports of delivery. On our lakes the same thing could be done.

Sir, it is an encroachment on the law as it has always stood; it is an encroachment upon the rights of American ship-owners; it gives a premium to the owners of foreign vessels so that goods may be brought in foreign bottoms to the exclusion of American shipping.

Mr. MCLANE. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit me to conclude the explanation I rose to make?

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.

Mr. MCLANE. I was about saying that it has been the practice of this Government during this and every preceding Congress, almost nem. con., without opposition, to grant permission by law when application is made that a vessel, having entered a port of entry with a cargo for ports of delivery within the same collection district, to deliver the same at the port of delivery, deputy collectors being appointed for the same.

Mr. KELLY. I have never heard of it.

Mr. MCLANE. Laws have been passed to authorize it——

Mr. CONGER. On application to the Secretary of the Treasury. Make this bill so, on application to the Secretary of the Treasury. We have a law which provides that where consignment is made to a port of delivery notice may be given at that port of delivery and at the port of entry, in order to get permission to discharge the cargo at that port of delivery. Let this bill follow that law and it will be less objectionable.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Michigan. In the first place, the gentleman is not correct in the assertion that he makes that there is any existing law by which you can now appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury and he can grant permission to a foreign vessel, after it is entered at a port of entry, to proceed forward and unload its cargo at a port of delivery.

It was in response to a letter which I addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking that such permission should be granted to the importing house to which I have alluded, and which was compelled by the exigencies of the case to put their cargo on board of a foreign vessel in a West India port, that the Secretary of the Treasury replied that the statute absolutely forbade his granting my request. I requested him to permit that vessel to go forward and unload its freight at the port of delivery.

It was in response to the letter from me asking such permission that the Secretary stated there was no existing law which could in any manner be so construed as to authorize him to grant this permission to an importer of foreign goods bringing the same into the United States in a foreign vessel. It was because of the fact of that very embarrassment—that there was not any law granting relief in such cases—that this proposed legislation was sought by parties in interest, and, in fact, on the suggestion of the officers of the Treasury Department. In introducing the resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, I acted on a full and clear understanding with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, as shown by his letter to me, published in the RECORD of this morning, that the legislation asked for by the resolution was important to the commercial interests of the country and required to relieve importers from the difficulties, and I may say injustice, under which they suffer. It is not the town of Norwich or parties that import foreign products into ports in my district that alone suffer from the operation of statutes enacted nearly a century ago and adapted to an entirely different condition of things in this country.

Navigation on the Connecticut River is embarrassed in the same way that the navigation and importation of goods on the river Thames are injuriously affected. The same embarrassment I presume exists in regard to the Hudson River. The importer may bring in goods to be delivered at some port of delivery up that river thirty miles or more from the city of New York, which is a port of entry, but under the present law he is required to unload the goods at the port of entry and thence transport the same to the port of delivery by lighters or railroad. If this bill should pass and become a law then a foreign vessel laden with imported goods for Hudson City or the city of Poughkeepsie, which places are situated up the North River, assuming that these cities are ports of delivery and the residence and place of business of the parties to whom the goods are consigned, the consignor may enter the vessel and cargo at the port of entry and afterward go forward and deliver the goods to the consignee at the port of delivery. The existing law, if enforced by the collector at the port of New York, would compel the vessel to unload its cargo in the harbor of that city and then by river craft or railroad conveyances to carry the goods to Hudson City or Poughkeepsie.

It is not my State alone which suffers; it is not the business on the Connecticut or Thames River alone that is unfavorably affected; it is not alone the importing house which I have alluded to that is embarrassed by the operation of this law; but importing merchants doing business at ports of delivery in other States on navigable rivers where there is foreign commerce suffer in like manner. I have no fear whatever that the coasting trade of this country, whether carried on on the seaboard, on rivers, or on lakes, will suffer any injury whatever from the legislation now proposed, nor is it the intent of parties interested in the passage of the proposed bill to invade the rights of American ship-owners.

A word with regard to the printing of the bill. In the remarks which I made yesterday to the House I said that I was entirely willing that the bill should be printed in the RECORD, and as I understand the report of the same it is substantially. My remarks then were, "I concur with the gentleman from Michigan that it is perfectly proper the bill should be printed, and I will have the accompanying report printed with it as part of my remarks." When I opened the RECORD this morning I expected to find, as the gentleman says that he did, the bill printed in the same, line for line and letter for letter as reported by the committee, and I cannot see how the substance of the bill as printed varies essentially from the bill as drafted and reported by the committee. The remarks of gentlemen who discussed the bill appear in full in the columns of the RECORD, and the letters of Assistant Secretary French and the importers at Norwich are also published entire, but the bill as printed, it may be claimed, is not quite as full in words as the original one presented to the House.

The SPEAKER. It is not usual to print bills in the RECORD unless a special request is made to that effect.

Mr. WAIT. I certainly made the request that the bill, report, and correspondence should all be published in the RECORD, and the meaning of the bill as printed in the same cannot, I think, be misunderstood. What I desire is action on this matter by the House at the earliest time possible.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will allow me a moment. I wish to suggest this: it is evident this bill either is not understood by the gentlemen debating it, or else there is a very serious question as to whether it ought to pass or not. Certainly, there is a marked difference of opinion among friends here as to the meaning and effect of the bill, and we ought not to be required to act on a measure of this sort until it is in print on our tables. I ask gentlemen to consent either that it be recommitted to the committee, so it may be printed and brought in in a new shape, or they drop its consideration this morning and let it be printed so we may see the whole thing, report and all, before we are asked to pass it.

Mr. McLANE. I propose, with the consent of my colleague on the Committee on Commerce, to move to recommit the bill and have it printed; but before making that motion it is only reasonable I should desire to make a word of explanation to my friend from New York. This bill has no reference whatever to that section of the Revised Statutes to which reference has been made, section 2771. That section of the Revised Statutes forbids a foreign vessel to unload at any other port than ports of entry. That is a law doubtless for the protection of American shipping.

This does not interfere with that. It is simply a law to avoid the numerous special acts we are in the habit of passing to permit vessels having entered at a port of entry to go and unload at ports of delivery in the same district. Such acts are rarely objected to. In the case of the Connecticut River, to which reference has been made by the honorable gentleman from Connecticut who introduced this bill, his object was to avoid the introduction of a special act to cover that case. The proposition now is to pass a general law covering all cases. There is nothing in it but this provision, that, having entered at a port of entry, the vessel may proceed forward and unload its cargo at ports of delivery within the same collection district. It is an economical measure. Our practice now is to appoint an additional officer, with a salary of $500 or $1,000 a year, for vessels which have already entered at a port of entry. This is to avoid that, and to permit a vessel to unload anywhere in one collection district after it has entered at the port of entry. Although I shall cheerfully vote to recommit and print, because I believe every question should be fully understood, yet I do not think I ought to sit still and allow gentlemen to take exception to this because it interferes with the statute referred to. And if gentlemen will observe the section, 2779 of the Revised Statutes, they will perceive that foreign vessels have now the right to go from one port of entry to another port of entry and unload their cargoes, which is a much greater interference with the coasting trade of American vessels than the authority granted by this bill to unload at ports of delivery in the collection district where they have entered at a port of entry.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. One reply to my friend from Maryland. That gentleman appears not to see that a collection district may extend for many hundred miles. Take the district in which the city of New York is, and there are ports of delivery within a hundred and fifty miles of that city, the port of entry being New York City. Take the Louisiana collection district, which runs all the way up the Mississippi River. There are various ports of delivery, but only one port of entry, and at those ports of delivery the Government has not stationed its detective officers, who are employed for the purpose of preventing smuggling or any evasion of the revenue laws. Those officers are stationed only at ports of entry.

It may be well for gentlemen to advocate a principle, although in my judgment entirely unintentional, which will permit a foreign vessel to enter goods at one port of entry, and to deliver a portion of the cargo at one port of delivery, and three-quarters of the cargo at other ports of delivery where the Government has not provided proper officers to see the revenue is not defrauded.

I am glad the gentleman has moved to recommit the bill so we may see it in print, and when the proper time arrives for its discussion I hope to be able to show there are very grave objections to the House passing any such law.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee of Ways and Means should look into it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. This is an important question, and one not sufficiently understood by the House to vote on it intelligently. It is far-reaching in its results, and affects commerce in different directions. I hope the gentlemen on the committee of which I am a member will submit to the motion to have it recommitted and printed and it can be subsequently reported.

Mr. McLANE. That is the motion I have submitted. I have the floor, as I yielded only to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I thought the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. McLANE. Before the question is put on my motion to recommit, I claim the indulgence of the House to say to the gentleman from New York that, as extensive as may be the collection district of New York, I think he will find that permission has already been granted to the unloading of foreign vessels at ports of delivery in that district.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. By act of Congress?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly. That is what I have already explained; special acts.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. By special act?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly; and we propose to do away with the necessity of passing any such special acts and to provide a general law covering all such cases and for the purpose of relieving this embarrassment on the part of our merchants to which attention has been called. This bill merely provides that when a vessel has entered a port of entry it may be allowed to proceed to unload its cargo at ports of delivery within the same collection district to which that cargo has been consigned, which interferes much less with the coasting trade in American vessels than the right granted by section 2779 to foreign vessels of going from ports of entry to other ports of entry. I now move to print and recommit the bill.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. McLANE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I desire to say a word. The course of this debate tends to prejudice this bill. Why not unloose all the bands possible, so as to permit the largest liberty of interchange. The principal objection made to this bill is that it will interfere with domestic ship-owners. It is said they will not have the same opportunity, if this bill be passed, to do the carrying trade in our inland waters or rivers.

Why, Mr. Speaker, let me say, preliminarily, that by our tariffs we have forbidden our people to build ships; for they can be built cheaper outside of our country. By our navigation laws we forbid our people to buy ships abroad. We are the only nation in the world that has that prohibition. It is worse than a mere restriction.

Now, sir, when a measure is reported here, in the line of economy to the shipper, to the consignee, to the consumer, and to all engaged in commerce; and when a modicum of liberty is to be allowed by this bill, gentlemen under some trepidation raise the old question of the sanctity of our navigation laws. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. French, says something about this bill that looks like progress:

> In this case, to require the American importer to unlade an entire cargo at a port of entry in order to transport the same but a few miles in an American vessel, is of itself a check on the natural course of trade, and may subject him to expenses which are burdensome and unjust.

And this we can all see in the illustration given yesterday by my friend from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] as to his own waters. Now, by section 2771 of the Revised Statutes the House will see that:

> Vessels which are not vessels of the United States shall be admitted to unlade only at ports of entry established by law.

At ports of entry; one or more ports of entry. You may unlade the vessel at one port of entry and take the residue of the cargo without breaking the bulk to another port of entry. At the first port of entry it of course goes through all the inspection and detection provided for by law. It pays the duty. Then why can it not go to another port of entry? When that part of its commerce is completed and duties paid, then this bill comes in and says very properly that in the natural course of economic trade the cargo destined to a certain port of delivery may be unloaded there. The unlading is in the interest of free trade.

Where is the harm to revenue or trade in all this? It saves much expense. Why, sir, if our American vessels cannot compete with the world, if we by our inventive genius and machinery cannot rival successfully foreign vessels on our coasts and inland, then it is time we should do as the Secretary of the Treasury himself advised in his last report. If we cannot buy vessels abroad freely, then levy your tariff duty per ton on foreign-bought vessels, as he suggests. Thus allow our people the largest liberty of trade consistent with revenue. Whenever you unloose these bonds of trade, unclasp these shackles on commerce, you help not merely the seaboard cities, not merely your lake cities, not merely your Pacific coast cities, who trade to Japan and China and the Sandwich Islands, but you go further; you promote the paramount agricultural interest, you aid the interest of the great body of our people who produce two and a half billions of values. They do and would send abroad these astounding values. If you would give an impulse to the farm, and enlarge its market; if you would give to the men that have 87½ per cent. of the export trade of this country a chance to buy abroad and bring what they buy here in the cheapest way possible while they send abroad their productions; if you would help to buy as well as to sell in the very highest market in the world, then favor any measure in the line of economy to our trade and of the enlargement of that trade all round the world. This bill does that in a small but significant way.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania three minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I shall not follow the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] in his remarks generally, but I beg leave to remind him that Americans can own foreign-built vessels, and use them in our foreign commerce; and that foreign owners of foreign ships can engage in our foreign commerce. We have reserved simply our internal and coastwise trade to ourselves in order to maintain ship-yards and machine building establishments, as a school for a navy, that we may not be dependent upon England or any other foreign country for ships, engineers, and sailors in time of war.

I desire to say that I think there should be an amendment put into this bill. The gentleman from New York intimates that they have free trade somewhere else. Now, I will ask him if an American ship arrives at one port in England and finds it necessary to go to another, say from Hull to Bristol or from Bristol to Hull, can it do so with entire freedom? Great Britain enjoys without tax our whole light-house system, and yet if an American ship or schooner shall want to pass from Hull to Bristol or from Bristol to Hull, or from any other one British port to another, she must pay extra light dues.

Free trade in England means freedom for British trade, with impositions upon foreign trade. Now we should incorporate into this bill a reciprocity treaty, a provision that those taking advantage of this bill shall have the benefits of our light-house system free, if they come from a nation that grants us freely the benefits of their light-house system. Then you will put American ships on an equality with foreign ships. I say that we are legislating for America, and not for foreign nations, and that he is worse than an infidel who does not look out for his own family.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. MCLANE, that the bill be printed and recommitted; and it was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SEAFORD, DELAWARE.

Mr. MCLANE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2790) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Seaford, Delaware; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector or other officer at Seaford, Delaware, who shall have power to enter and clear all vessels coming to that port, and who shall receive a salary not exceeding $500 per annum.

Mr. MCLANE. This bill is in the usual form which has been adopted where ports of delivery have been made ports of entry. When I addressed the House in explanation of the other bill, I called attention to the fact that the bill which we have just recommitted and ordered to be printed was intended to make such applications as this unnecessary.

This bill is not open to some of the objections taken to the other bill, because by virtue of this law ports of delivery become ports of entry; they are ports of delivery within a collection district, and by law we make them ports of entry. In order that the House may see that there is no change in the practice in regard to such matters which has heretofore obtained, I ask the Clerk to read the letter from the Treasury Department which I send to his desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 26, 1879.

SIR: I am directed by the Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, in which you state that the Committee on Commerce have appointed you chairman of a sub-committee to take into consideration a petition of the vessel-owners and masters at Seaford, Delaware, and vicinity for the establishment of a port of delivery at that place, so that vessel-owners can hail from there and have their marine documents issued by the customs officer who may be stationed at said port.

Seaford is not at present a port established by law, but there is a deputy collector stationed there under charge of the collector of customs at Wilmington, Delaware, with a compensation of $3 per day when employed, and not to exceed $498 per year.

As the vessel-owners state that the establishment of a port of delivery at Seaford would inure to their advantage, this Department would have no objection to the creation of such port of delivery, provided the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs would not be increased thereby.

The total expenses now incurred at that place is for the salary of the deputy collector; and the salary of the surveyor to be appointed, if this measure be carried into effect, should not exceed that now paid to the deputy collector, say $500.

Very respectfully,

H. F. FRENCH,
Assistant Secretary.

HON. R. M. MCLANE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER. As this bill provides not only for the appointment of a deputy collector but also for his salary, the title should be amended so as to read, "and for other purposes;" and I make that motion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEADS ON LANDS WITHIN RAILROAD LIMITS.

Mr. CONVERSE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2298) to amend the act entitled "An act to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits," approved March 3, 1879.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits," approved March 3, 1879, be so amended as to read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the even sections within the limits of any grant of public lands to any railroad company, or to any military road company, or to any State in aid of any railroad or military road, shall be open to settlers under the homestead laws to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres to each settler, and any person who has, under existing laws, taken a homestead on any even section within the limits of any railroad or military road land grant, and who, by existing laws, shall have been restricted to eighty acres, may enter under the homestead laws an additional eighty acres adjoining the land embraced in his original entry, if such additional land be subject to entry; or if such person so elect, he may surrender his entry to the United States for cancellation, and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead laws, the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made. And the residence and cultivation of such person upon and of the land embraced in his original entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and of the land embraced in his additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from the five years' residence and cultivation required by law: Provided, That in no case shall patent issue upon an additional or new homestead entry under this act until the person has actually, and in conformity with the homestead laws, occupied, resided upon, and cultivated the land embraced therein at least one year.

The amendment reported from the committee was to add to the bill the following:

And said original act, approved March 3, 1879, is hereby repealed.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to make a short explanation of this bill. The law of March 3, 1879, authorized the homesteaders who had selected only eighty acres each, within railroad limits, to select an additional eighty acres for a homestead, without the payment of the registration fee of $5 which is provided by law. It so happens that the provision of the Revised Statutes authorizing a soldier to select an additional eighty acres, where he has selected land within railroad limits, requires him to pay the $5 fee. The law as it now stands, therefore, discriminates unfavorably against the soldier and in favor of the citizen. The Committee on Public Lands thought these small fees ought to be paid by all who add to their homesteads in that way, and thus make the law uniform.

This bill is a simple re-enactment of the present law, leaving out one single sentence which I will now read:

And any person so making additional entries of eighty acres, or new entry after the surrender and cancellation of his original entry, shall be permitted to do so without payment of fees and commissions.

These are the words left out of the present law. Unless further discussion is desired, I will call the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, whether this bill makes provision in relation to those grants which in some instances were for the odd sections, and in other instances for the even sections—whether the bill is sufficiently guarded in that respect. I think that in some cases grants were made to States or railroads for the odd sections and in other instances for the even sections. Now, this bill ought to harmonize to that extent with our legislation touching railroad grants.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will state to the gentleman that at the last session of Congress provision was made for that condition of things. The only cases where the even sections were granted to railroads were cases in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, I believe. At the last session of the present Congress provision was made to remedy such cases. This bill simply harmonizes the whole law on that subject.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to make a single suggestion. As I understand, in many of the States—probably in others than those to which the gentleman has referred—settlers upon the public lands have unwittingly entered, and the officers of the Government having control of the land offices have permitted the entry of, lands belonging to railroad companies. These lands have been entered by mistake; the fees upon such entry have been paid to the officers of the Government—the register and receiver. It has been discovered afterward that the lands thus entered belonged to sections which had been granted by the Government to railroad companies. The object of the bill of last session, as I understood, was to enable persons who had thus made entries by mistake and paid their money to the Government to make location upon other lands. The bill to which the gentleman refers does not require that persons thus entering other lands shall be required to pay additional fees, because the mistake was made by the officers of the Government as well as by the parties making the entry. I do not see any reason why, under the present bill, an additional fee should be exacted from these parties.

Mr. CONVERSE. I shall be glad to answer my friend from Mississippi in a single word. This bill does not apply to the cases to which he has referred. It applies only to cases where eighty acres have been entered within railroad limits and the party desires to enter eighty acres more, making one hundred and sixty in all. This is the only case to which this bill applies. I ask for a vote.

The question being on seconding the demand for the previous question, it was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 50) filling existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

DOORKEEPER FOR COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be authorized to employ a doorkeeper to act also as messenger, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and who shall receive the same compensation as is now paid to messengers employed by the Doorkeeper of the House, and who shall hold office until otherwise ordered by the House.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. COX in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask that all prior orders be informally passed over to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

CHOCTAW NATION.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 440) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read first.

The bill was read.

Mr. MORRISON. I observe by the Calendar that this bill has been made a special order for the second Tuesday of January next. I believe it goes over without any motion.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be remembered that when this bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs I proposed that it be set for the 13th of December. Some objection was made, coming, I believe, from the gentleman from Michigan on the other side, [Mr. CONGER;] and at his suggestion the second Tuesday in January was fixed for the consideration of the bill. I suppose it will go over until that day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under Rule 114, when objection is made to the consideration of any bill in Committee of the Whole, the question must be taken without debate. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside?

The bill was laid aside.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1715) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes and to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes and of the Statutes at Large relating to the removal of causes from State courts.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that this bill be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The next business on the Calendar was a resolution, reported by Mr. MURCH from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, proposing to authorize and direct that committee to inquire into all matters pertaining to the preparation and furnishing of material for the construction of public buildings, &c.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that this resolution be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

ENLARGEMENT OF HOUSE RESTAURANT.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2265) to direct the Architect of the Capitol to move the House bathing-rooms for the enlargement of the House restaurant.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that this bill be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

CLERK AND MESSENGER FOR SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

The next business on the Calendar was a resolution reported by Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, from the Committee of Accounts, proposing to authorize the Sergeant-at-Arms to employ an additional clerk and messenger.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that this resolution be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

LOSS BY LEAKAGE OR CASUALTY OF EXPORTED SPIRITS.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation.

Mr. MORRISON. This is the bill which I desire the committee to consider.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That where spirits are withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation according to law it shall be lawful, under such rules and regulations and limitations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for an allowance to be made for leakage or loss by any unavoidable accident, and without any fraud or negligence of the distiller, owner, exporter, carrier, or their agents or employés, occurring during transportation from a distillery warehouse to the port of export; nor shall any assessment be collected for such loss or leakage where the same has not been paid on distilled spirits exported since the 1st day of May, 1878.

SEC. 2. That where the spirits provided for in the preceding section are covered by a valid claim of insurance in excess of the market value thereof, exclusive of the tax, the tax upon such spirits shall not be remitted to the extent of such excessive insurance.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is approved and its passage recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I introduced it at the extra session. After consideration the Committee of Ways and Means directed it to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass. Under existing laws spirits for export are gauged at the distillery warehouse where they are manufactured. A bond is given for their delivery on the seagoing vessel for shipment, where they are regauged. For any deficiency between these gauges ninety cents per gallon is taxed upon the owner, whether this deficiency and loss is the result of fraud or of leakage, evaporation or unavoidable accident. Spirits for export are chiefly made near the corn-fields of the West, a thousand miles from the sea, and it has been found impracticable, if not impossible, to prevent leakage, evaporation, and other wastage in reaching the seaport. That losses by unavoidable accident will and do occur in the transportation of alcohol as in the transportation of other articles, hardly need to be stated.

The internal-revenue laws impose a tax of ninety cents per gallon on all spirits made and consumed in the country; but no tax can be levied on that made for export because of the provision in our Constitution that "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." To tax that which is actually lost on its way to the seaport without the wrong-doing or neglect of the owner is to lay a tax on articles which are not made for and do not go into consumption here. The manufacturer not only loses his property, but is taxed or fined ninety cents per gallon for a loss which he could not avoid.

The spirit of this provision of the Constitution which forbids a tax or duty on articles exported from any State—if the Constitution yet has a spirit which legislators are bound to respect—applies as well to articles exported from Peoria as from New Orleans, Baltimore, or New York. Within the meaning of this provision protecting from tax or duty exports from any State, the article going through the commercial gate at New York or New Orleans on its way to a foreign market is as much an export freed from tax or duty before as after passing these gates, and as much an export freed from tax or duty as if made and exported directly from one of these gate cities.

That the exporter from Peoria must reach the foreign market in part by railroad or the Mississippi River cannot deprive him of the right to export articles free from tax or duty. There is a statute providing allowance for loss by casualty on the sea. Justice and law demand an allowance for these losses on river and railroad. There was a time in 1868 when all spirits were taxable, and there was no provision of law for their export. And until 1872 the burdens imposed on the export trade in this article were so onerous that none were exported. Since the law of 1872 authorizing deficiency assessments but providing for exporting in bond and without prepayment of taxes to be refunded, the trade had partially revived and had increased from six hundred thousand dollars ($587,413) in 1875, to fifteen millions ($14,837,581) in the last fiscal year.

It is estimated that this industry employs ten thousand men, and consumes the product of one hundred thousand acres of cultivated land, four or five millions of bushels of grain, and adds from four to five millions of dollars annually to the material wealth of the country. In this economic mode fifty-six pounds of corn are put into fourteen pounds of alcohol. We thus cheapen transportation and reach the markets at one-fourth the cost of exporting to foreign markets at least a portion of the one-third of our grain product, for which our tariff-protected friends have so long promised us a market at home. This trade is entitled to a more liberal policy. The manufacturers of spirits in a petition presented to the committee complain that while no spirits were being exported from this country because of the onerous provisions of the law of 1868, the foreign demand was supplied from other countries than our own. These markets were thus lost to our manufacturers of this article, in which competition is still very close. By treaty arrangements in some, certainly in one, of the best markets, one of our chief competitors has an advantage of twelve cents a gallon over us, by reason of commercial treaties which give Germany advantages in French markets. While this loss by leakage and evaporation is comparatively very small, being less than one-half of 1 per cent., yet it is sufficient to turn the balance against us in closely contested foreign markets and commercial centers.

On this subject the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says in his last annual report what I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Where the spirits are withdrawn in good faith for exportation, and due diligence is exercised in their transportation, and losses occur by evaporation or accident in transportation without fraud or negligence on the part of the distiller, owner, or transportation company, or their agents, in my judgment no tax should be levied for any such loss. Such a tax necessarily discourages the exportation of American distilled spirits, and would seem to be contrary to sound public policy; and I have the honor to recommend that existing laws be so amended as to provide that taxes shall not be assessed for deficiencies occurring under the circumstances named.

Mr. MORRISON. The pending bill, Mr. Chairman, while providing the remedy asked for, is believed to be sufficiently well guarded to prevent fraud, for an allowance can only be made "for leakage or loss by unavoidable accident without any fraud or negligence of the distiller, owner, exporter, carrier, or their agents or employés, and under such regulations and limitations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe." Of this bill as a remedy for the grievances complained of, I have here a letter from the Commissioner which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, May 22, 1879.

SIR: I have your note of this date asking for suggestions in regard to the propriety of passing House bill 1955, authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouse for exportation.

In reply, I have to state that in my opinion it would be eminently wise and just to pass this bill allowing for leakage or loss by unavoidable accident, and without any fraud or negligence of the distiller, owner, exporter, carrier, or their agents or employés, occurring during transportation from distillery warehouses to the port of export of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouse for exportation.

It is certainly a great hardship on the exporter of alcohol to be required to pay ninety cents per gallon tax upon spirits which have leaked or been lost by unavoidable accident while the same were being transported from the place of manufacture to the port of export. The existing law expressly provides that spirits shall be withdrawn from the distillery warehouse without the payment of the tax, but other provisions of the law require a regauge of the spirits at the port of export and assessments made for deficiencies. Where this deficiency results from fraud or negligence the tax should be paid, but if it is simply an incident of transportation the exporter should not be required to pay the tax.

The exportation of alcohol has become a business of great proportions, and in my opinion American distillers will be able to very largely extend this business, and it seems to me proper to give them the encouragement that this proposed act affords. In regard to that provision of the bill which relieves from assessments from the 1st of May, 1878, I would say that it is a question addressed entirely to the wisdom of Congress, and if passed in its present shape would have the effect of relieving distillers from assessments for losses from which they obtained no advantage and for spirits that never actually went upon the market. The second section of the bill seems to be entirely proper, so as to have whatever insurance may be obtained upon the taxes upon the spirits to inure to the benefit of the Government.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

Hon. W. R. MORRISON,
Of Sub-Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire now to say a single word as to the provision in relation to deficiency assessments. There was a time when the Commissioner of Internal Revenue believed he had the power, under existing law, to make the allowance provided for in this bill, and when no demand was made; and so it is that these manufacturers come to be in arrears. Afterward it was expected some action would be taken upon this bill at the extra session, but the matter was then left unsettled and undetermined. If it is not right to demand this tax for deficiencies to become due, it is not right to insist on the payment of those already due and yet unpaid. I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUBBELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and to move that it be printed and recommitted; and I now give notice that to-morrow, as soon as the fortification bill is disposed of, I shall ask the House to put it upon its passage.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed and recommitted.

EQUALIZATION OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2792) to regulate the assessment, collection, and equalization of taxes and the imposition of licenses in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

HULMAN AND FAIRBANKS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move by unanimous consent to go to the Speaker's table and take up a bill (S. No. 618) for the relief of Herman Hulman and Crawford Fairbanks, of the city of Terre Haute, Indiana, which came from the Senate this morning.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up. It directs that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, required to adjust and settle the claims for deficiency tax assessed by said Commissioner against said Hulman and Fairbanks, as distillers, for deficiencies which it is claimed occurred at their distillery in said city of Terre Haute during the months of October, 1878, and January, 1879, upon the following basis, to wit: Said Commissioner shall first ascertain the capacity that was actually used by said distillers during each of said months, which shall be determined by the tubs actually filled and emptied by them during each month. He shall then ascertain the actual amount of grain mashed by them during each of said months, and the yield of spirits per bushel from such grain for each month. He shall next ascertain whether any accidents which were unavoidable occurred during either or both of said months in the breaking or destruction of machinery or in the scarcity of water at their distillery, which prevented or delayed them in the mashing of grain or in the filling or emptying of tubs at the proper time. If he shall find that any such accidents did occur he shall next ascertain the amount of loss that said distillers sustained thereby for each of said months. He shall next ascertain if said distillers fully accounted to the Government for all the spirits produced by them at their distillery during each of said months, and, if so, whether the amount so produced each month, after deducting from the capacity or amount charged against them all losses and detention sustained by accident as aforesaid, if any accidents occurred, was equal to 80 per cent. of the capacity actually used by them for each of said months; and if he shall so find, he shall then abate the assessments, in whole or in part, made against said distillers for said months, which are as follows: for the month of October, a sum not exceeding $13,198.50; and for the month of January, a sum not exceeding $5,795.06; and no assessment for deficiency tax for these months shall be made against them, except as herein provided. But if said Commissioner shall find that said distillers did not make 80 per cent. of the capacity used by them during each of said months, after making the proper deductions for accidents as aforesaid, if any occurred, during either or both of said months, then he shall change the assessments made for said months so as to conform them to the amount of deficiency that he shall find due against them for each of said months; and they shall then be assessed by him for the amounts of deficiency so found due against them for each month, and not otherwise.

Mr. WHITE. Why should not this bill go to the Private Calendar like other private relief bills?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not perhaps aware that if this is not passed before the 25th of this month the parties who seek this relief will lose the opportunity of getting it altogether. I will state that the Committee of Ways and Means this morning examined this subject, and have unanimously directed me to make this motion; that the Senate Committee on Finance unanimously reported the bill to the Senate, and the Senate unanimously passed it; and further, that the whole question is left to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to determine whether these parties have any rights or not, so that there can be no objection to it.

The bill was taken up, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was accordingly passed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted indefinitely to Mr. DICKEY on account of sickness in his family.

JOHN HERBOLD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting petition of Mr. John Herbold, for reimbursement of losses ($552) sustained by him in fulfilling his contract for work on State, War, and Navy Department building; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

DEFICIENCIES IN INDIAN SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to a deficiency in the appropriation for transportation of Indian supplies for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the Indian service during the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

MASONIC BANK OF PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2053) to authorize the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to waive enforcement of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes so far as the same affects certain drafts upon him now held by the Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 7th day of October, 1876, A. B. Carey, paymaster United States Army, did issue his checks upon the United States assistant treasurer at New York, one for $88.03 and one for $88.53, payable to the order of Jefferson McIlwaine; and

Whereas the said Jefferson McIlwaine did, on the 29th day of September, 1876, execute his power of attorney to Hugh McIlwaine, empowering him, the said Hugh McIlwaine, to indorse any checks or drafts issued by the Government made payable to the order of him, the said Jefferson McIlwaine; and

Whereas the Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh did, upon an indorsement of the said checks by the said Hugh McIlwaine, purchase and pay for the same; and

Whereas the Treasury of the United States refuses to redeem said checks because the power of attorney to indorse the same was executed before the checks were issued, instead of after their said issue, as required by law; and

Whereas the person to whose order said checks were issued cannot now be found by the said Masonic Bank: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York be, and he is hereby, authorized to waive, in this particular case only, so much of the provisions of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as requires powers of attorney to be dated subsequent to the issue of checks, and to pay the same as at present indorsed to the said Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh.

The amendment reported from the committee was to strike out the words "and to pay the same as at present indorsed to the said Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh" and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And that the certificate of acknowledgment of powers of attorney shall show that the officer taking the acknowledgment at the time thereof read and fully explained the power of attorney to the person acknowledging the same, and to pay said checks as at present indorsed to the said Masonic Bank at Pittsburgh.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ERRETT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARK GRAPESHOT.

Mr. PHELPS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 103, a bill (H. R. 2802) for the relief of the owner of the bark Grapeshot; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SPRINGFIELD AND NEW LONDON RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McCOOK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 55) granting a right of way across Water Shops Pond, in Springfield, Massachusetts, to the Springfield and New London Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. This is a public bill. Under the rule, only private bills are in order to-day.

Mr. McCOOK. I thought perhaps this bill was rather upon the dividing line between public bills and private bills. I have no personal interest in the measure. Is the point raised that it is a public bill?

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair to announce the fact, so that the House may act understandingly. The bill can be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. SAMFORD. Let it be read, the right to object being reserved.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way by means of a bridge over and across the Water Shops Pond, so-called, belonging to the United States, in Springfield, Massachusetts, is hereby granted to the Springfield and New London Railroad Company, for railroad purposes; the same to be used and enjoyed by said company at the same point and in the same location and extent that a way is now used by said company by means of a bridge heretofore constructed with the approval of the Secretary of War: Provided, That whenever said right of way shall cease to be used for the purposes aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act is reserved to Congress.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

Mr. Anson G. McCook, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House Bill No. 55, submit the following report:

In 1875 the Springfield and New London Railroad Company, incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, and chartered to build a railroad from Springfield, Massachusetts, to New London, Connecticut, made application to Colonel J. G. Benton, commandant at the Springfield national armory, for a right of way by means of a bridge, to be constructed by said company, across Water Shops Pond, owned by the United States and used to furnish power for the machine department of the armory. The company's application was referred to the Secretary of War, and, after a full examination, he gave permission to the company to build the bridge in the proposed location, on condition that the company should apply to the next Congress for the necessary legislation to confirm the right, and, in the event of failure to secure it, to remove the structure whenever notified so to do by the Secretary of War.

In accordance with such permission the bridge was constructed in the autumn of 1875, and has since been in constant use.

At the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress said company presented its petition for the purpose above stated, and the same was referred in the House to the Committee on Military Affairs. In February, 1877, the committee took the subject into consideration, and agreed upon a favorable report; but, in consequence of the unusual interruptions to the regular business of that session, no report was made, and by some oversight all the papers belonging to the case were lost. The failure to secure the needed legislation resulted from no fault or neglect on the part of the company.

In the Forty-fifth Congress, near its close, a bill to the same effect, on the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs, was passed in the House without dissent, but no action in the Senate could be secured before final adjournment.

It appears from the statements of the officers of the Government that the said railroad is of benefit to the armory in cheapening freights on coal and other heavy articles, by the construction and operation of a spur track leading directly to the shops, and that the Secretary of War has no desire to revoke the permission granted to said company.

Your committee find that the bill carefully protects the interests of the United States, and they therefore recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DODDRIDGE & DAVIS.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2803) for the relief of Doddridge & Davis; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to pay to Doddridge & Davis, bankers, of Corpus Christi, Texas, the sum of $1,827.89, in lieu of check No. 45923 on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, dated October 15, 1878, payable to Messrs. Doddridge, Davis & Caden or order, and signed by E. B. Atwood, captain and assistant quartermaster, brevet major United States Army, which check, it is claimed, was indorsed by Doddridge, Davis & Caden to Doddridge & Davis, and by them indorsed, but lost in transmission by mail to the Marine National Bank of the city of New York; was never received by said bank, and never paid. But before the payment herein authorized the Secretary of the Treasury must be satisfied that the check has not been paid, and Doddridge & Davis are reqnired to execute a bond of indemnity to the United States with sufficient securities against the claim of the payees or indorsers of said draft, or of any person or persons in possession of or claiming the same; also to fully indemnify the United States against all loss or damage in the premises; and the Treasury Department is prohibited from paying said lost check to any person.

The report of the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred House bill No. 2277, for the relief of Doddridge & Davis, bankers, of Corpus Christi, Texas, on account of the loss of a quartermaster's check, beg leave to report:

It appears from the certificate of Captain E. B. Atwood, assistant quartermaster United States Army, dated at San Antonio, Texas, February 10, 1879, that on the 15th of October, 1878, he, as such assistant quartermaster, issued in favor of Messrs. Doddridge, Davis & Caden check No. 45923, on assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, for the sum of $1,827.89, on account of Army transportation. Also, from the affidavit of T. P. Rivera, cashier of the bank of claimants Doddridge & Davis, that on the 21st day of October, 1878, he, as such cashier, received from the firm of Doddridge, Davis & Caden said check, which was duly indorsed by said Doddridge & Davis, and mailed to the Marine National Bank of New York on the day the same was received as aforesaid; that said Marine National Bank gave advice of the non-receipt of said check, and payment of the same was stopped at the office of the assistant treasurer in New York. Also, from the affidavit of John T. Murphy, bookkeeper of said firm of Doddridge, Davis & Caden, that said firm, in due course of business, on the 21st day of October, 1878, received and duly indorsed said check to said Doddridge & Davis. Also, from the affidavit of John D. Fish, cashier of the Marine National Bank of the city of New York, that Doddridge & Davis, of Corpus Christi, Texas, "keep, and have kept, an open account with and at the said Marine National Bank of the city of New York since and prior to the 15th day of October, A. D. 1878; that no such credit has been made to their account as is hereinafter described, to wit:" (here follows a description of the check above referred to;) and that said check he (deponent) believes to have been sent to said bank (referring to said Marine Bank) through the United States mail by said firm of Doddridge & Davis, and to have been lost in transit thereto. And from the letter of the assistant treasurer United States at New York, under date of June 17, 1879, it appears the check in question has not been paid.

Your committee, from the evidence before it, being fully satisfied that the claim for $1,827.89 is just and unpaid, respectfully report the accompanying bill for the payment of the same, and recommend its passage.

Mr. PRICE. Does this bill contain the usual provision for a bond indemnifying the United States against any possible loss?

Mr. UPSON. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW SITE FOR NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 674) to locate and purchase a new site for the United States Naval Observatory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

Mr. BREWER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 91) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN P. M'GILL.

Mr. HARMER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2804) for the relief of John P. McGill; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES DOUGHERTY.

Mr. BICKNELL, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 270) to reimburse Charles Dougherty for his expenses to the consulate of Londonderry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ACCEPTANCE OF DECORATIONS.

Mr. BICKNELL also, from the same committee, reported back joint resolution (H. R. No. 7) authorizing Francis V. Greene, United States Army, to accept certain decorations conferred on him by the Emperor of Russia, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas First Lieutenant Francis V. Greene, of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, was sent abroad, by order of the President of the United States, for the purpose of observing and reporting to the Government the progress of the late war between Russia and Turkey, and while in the pursuance of that duty of observation was personally exposed under fire in several battles, combats, and skirmishes; and

Whereas the Emperor of Russia has conferred upon the said Lieutenant Greene the following decorations and medals, to wit: First, the decoration of the third class of the Order of Saint Anne, for bravery under fire at the battle of Shipka Pass, August 23 and 24, 1877, and at the assault of Plevna, September 11, 1877; second, the decoration of the fourth class of the Order of Saint Vladimir, for bravery under fire during the passage of the Balkans, December 25 to 31, 1877, and at the battle of Philippopolis, January 15 to 17, 1878; third, the campaign medal, conferred upon all persons present in the campaign: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said Lieutenant Greene be authorized to accept the said decorations; but no title, rights, or privileges of any kind whatsoever shall be conferred upon the said Lieutenant Greene by the said decorations.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. KLOTZ. I demand a division on the passage of that joint resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 13.

Mr. KLOTZ. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BICKNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATSEY DAVENPORT.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 1597) granting a pension to Patsey Davenport.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Patsey Davenport, the mother of William Henry Davenport, who died in the service of the United States and upon whom she was dependent wholly for support, said pension to be at the rate of $8 per month, and to begin at the date of the death of said William Henry Davenport.

Mr. BREWER. Is not that subject to objection?

The SPEAKER. If present action be objected to, it must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BREWER. So I supposed, and I ask that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar so it may be considered with other like bills now there.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with the accompanying report, and ordered to be printed.

MARTHA J. ROBINSON.

Mr. HOSTETLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 740) granting a pension to Martha J. Robinson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WHITEWOOD FLUME COMPANY.

Mr. ACKLEN, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1078 a bill (H. R. No. 2805) incorporating the Whitewood Flume Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

D. M. HAMLIN.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee of Accounts, reported (as a substitute for a resolution of Mr. SPRINGER referred to that committee on the 9th instant) joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to D. M. Hamlin the sum of $56.25, the same being his salary as a member of the Capitol police force from the 8th to the 31st of July, 1879, and that an amount sufficient to pay the same is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SPRINGER. As originally presented this was drawn as a resolution of the House, the money to be paid out of the contingent fund. The Committee of Accounts have instead reported a joint resolution providing for the payment of the money out of the Treasury.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why has not the amount provided for in this joint resolution, and which is claimed to be due to this man, been paid? Does it relate to the extra month's pay at the last session or not?

Mr. MORSE. It does not. A word of explanation will satisfy the gentleman that the resolution is right and ought to pass. A member of the Capitol police force was discharged, but in the mean time had received under a resolution of the House a month's pay in advance. On the next day this man Hamlin was appointed to the place, but could not receive any pay, as the pay for that month had been drawn by his predecessor. He was regularly appointed to the service and discharged its duties and is entitled to the pay provided for by the joint resolution I have just reported.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then this does not come under the class of cases asking for a month's extra pay?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not. I can explain the matter exactly to the gentleman from Georgia. There was a law passed at the last session of Congress allowing the officers on this force to receive one month's pay in advance, and this month's pay was paid in advance to the person who was discharged on the 7th day of the month. Although discharged on the 7th day of the month he had received the pay for the entire month in advance, so that D. M. Hamlin, who was appointed to take his place, and did take his place, on the 8th of the month, could not draw any compensation for the services rendered by him during that month. It is necessary, therefore, this action should be taken in order that he may have the compensation to which he is entitled.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then this is for actual service, and not for extra month's pay.

Mr. MORSE. Exactly so.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is for actual service.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BEALE. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. SCALES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me before demanding the regular order of business in order that I may move to take up a joint resolution coming from the Senate for reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BEALE. I yield for that purpose.

UTE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. SCALES. I move by unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution No. 51, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado, and their removal and settlement elsewhere, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken up, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ARSENAL PROPERTY, CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. EVINS. I move by unanimous consent that joint resolution (S. R. No. 26) to transfer the arsenal property in the city of Charleston to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute for the use and accommodation of said school be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken up, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BEALE. I now demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being demanded, this being Friday, private business is first in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask to report back from the Committee of Claims sundry bills for the purpose of changing their reference to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BRIGHT. If the regular order is demanded, then I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, this being the day set apart for the consideration of private business.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend that so that the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up and considering the fortifications appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana I suppose intends to report that bill back from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir; I am instructed to report it back.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee has preference, but the House can have its wish if it prefers to take up for consideration the appropriation bill. If it should be the wish of the House to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider a general appropriation bill, then it will vote down the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee; but the Chair under the rule is bound to submit that motion first. If that motion be voted down, the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope that motion will not be voted down.

Mr. BAKER. I hope that will be done, as it will not take half an hour to consider the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I suppose this is not the subject of argument, but I will state there are only a few claims on the Private Calendar, which could be disposed of possibly in half an hour, and then the motion of the gentleman from Indiana could obtain and the House could go on to the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. BAKER. I should like to have the permission of the House to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will allow the same time to the gentleman from Indiana that he allowed to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. There are two appropriation bills we are instructed to report to the House to-day and to ask for their consideration and passage. I think I can safely assure the House that they will probably not occupy—that is my judgment about it—more than an hour or an hour and a half to pass them and send them to the other end of the Capitol. I trust that course will be pursued, and then the gentleman from Tennessee can dispose of the private business on the Calendar.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to make this additional statement: If the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana be carried out and we first dispose of the appropriation bills, I hope then the House will not interpose objection to going into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The House can do that after the fortification bills are disposed of.

Mr. BAKER. And I will aid the gentleman to do that.

Mr. McLANE. I wish to ask a question. I understand there are two fortification bills to be acted on?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. McLANE. Even on the estimate of the honorable gentleman from Indiana it will take an hour and a half to-day, which will to all intents and purposes consume the day. I hope the House will not go into committee on these appropriation bills, but will proceed to the consideration of the private business which regularly comes up on this day.

Mr. BAKER. I do not know how we can occupy the day more profitably than in the discharge of public business.

The question being taken on Mr. BRIGHT's motion, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, there were—ayes 48, noes 95.

So the motion was not agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Under instructions from the Committee on Appropriations, I report back the bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that I move that all general debate on the special order, being the fortifications bill, be limited to five minutes.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. CONVERSE in the chair) and proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAKER. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Before the Clerk proceeds to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, I desire to avail myself of the five minutes allowed for general debate for the purpose of briefly explaining this bill. The bill, Mr. Chairman, which is reported, making appropriations for fortifications, and the armament thereof, with one single exception, is the same bill that has been reported for the two preceding years. It appropriates for the preservation and repair of the fortifications the sum of $100,000. It provides the sum of $50,000 for the preparation of torpedoes in connection with the harbor defenses of our seaboard. The item for the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including the heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, projectiles, fuses, gunpowder, &c., has been increased by the sum of $100,000; so that that item in the present bill amounts to $225,000, in place of $125,000 as last year. The Chief of the Ordnance Department recommended to Congress an appropriation of $1,067,000 for this service. That was reduced by the Secretary of War, so that his recommendation, as it came to this House, was for an appropriation of $500,000 for this service. We have recommended from the Committee on Appropriations the sum of $225,000.

One single word by way of general explanation is all that I desire to submit, and that for the purpose of showing why we have increased this item. We found ourselves possessed at the close of the war of some twelve hundred 10-inch smooth-bore cannon and three hundred and twenty-five smooth-bore cannon of 15-inch caliber. It is known to every one that the rapid development in the science of gunnery has been such that guns that fifteen years ago were efficient are to-day entirely valueless for any effective purpose connected with the warfare of to-day. There have been about one hundred and twenty-five of these 10-inch guns converted into 8-inch rifles, and your committee have been assured by the Chief of Ordnance that these 8-inch rifles thus converted from 10-inch smooth-bore guns are equal in energy and efficiency to similar guns of the Armstrong construction. It costs the Department about $5,000 to convert and put in position for effective use a 10-inch smooth-bore cannon; a similar Armstrong gun could not be constructed in this country or imported from England for less than $15,000.

Hitherto the appropriation has been sufficient to enable the Department to convert not more than ten or fifteen guns in the course of the year. It would require, at that rate of conversion, to utilize guns which we now have on hand and which are comparatively valueless as they are, not less than eighty or one hundred years. With the additional appropriation of $100,000 thirty or thirty-five of these can be converted.

If any question arises I hope to be able to explain the matter more fully when we come to the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. Meanwhile I desire to say in conclusion that, at the present rate of conversion, if we should continue our appropriation at the sum of $125,000 it would take not less than twenty years to convert enough of these guns to fortify the batteries and forts of the harbor of New York alone.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAKER. If I have time.

Mr. BRIGHT. My question is whether this bill is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say that the sub-committee that reported this matter were entirely unanimous; and, as I am advised now, the whole committee are unanimously in favor of this bill. I believe I am right in that.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman is not exactly right. I simply stated I would not interpose an amendment, but I do not agree in the report of the committee.

Mr. BAKER. Then there is one gentleman on the committee who is opposed to the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, and read the first paragraph, as follows:

That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; also, the following for the armament of fortifications, namely:

Mr. REAGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "War," in line 9, insert the following:
For batteries for the defense of Galveston Harbor, Texas, $50,000.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word. Perhaps in the time I have I cannot say all I ought to say. In former years the Secretary of War has reported in favor of an appropriation of an amount of $50,000 for the defense of the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, and in the present estimate the recommendation is renewed.

In the last report of the Chief of Engineers, in summing up what he recommends should be appropriated, he says:

Batteries at entrance to the harbor of Galveston, Texas.—The object of these batteries of heavy guns, recently designed by the board of engineers for fortifications to be placed in Pelican Spit, Galveston Island, and Bolivar Point, is for the defense of the entrance to the harbor at Galveston, a harbor rapidly increasing in commercial importance. No appropriation for the construction of these works has yet been made. Appropriation asked for next fiscal year, $50,000.

Now, it will be seen from an examination of the bill before this committee that it proposes to appropriate only $100,000 for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense. We are continually told that it is necessary to preserve existing works of defense, but that economy forbids the idea that we should appropriate anything for any new work; that this is a day of civilization and progress. Galveston Harbor is the chief seaport for a very large extent of country, backed by a population of two million of people, with their commercial interests largely concentrated there. That city is so situated that in case of war, with the present enginery of war, it could be bombarded and burned by any vessel of a hostile power.

Now, if it be said that there is no prospect of war between this country and any other power, the same may be said in reference to every port of the United States. If it be necessary to provide for the defense of other seaport cities, then it is necessary to provide for the defense of Galveston, for it occupies a place of importance in our commerce, and is a place that would be of military importance in case of war.

Now, I ask that this appropriation of $50,000 be made for the purpose of erecting batteries with the kind of guns recommended by our Engineer Corps for the protection of Galveston Harbor.

Mr. FINLEY. I would inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] if his amendment is for an additional appropriation or for the use of that much of the sum recommended by the Committee on Appropriations for the general purpose of fortifications?

Mr. REAGAN. It is for $50,000 for the protection of Galveston Harbor.

Mr. BAKER. I trust that no change will be made in this appropriation bill, so far as the item now under consideration is concerned.

I desire to assure the committee, after the fullest conference with the officers having this matter in charge, that the sum of $100,000 is barely sufficient to enable the Engineer Department of the Army to keep our present works, on which many millions of dollars have been expended, in such a state of repair and preservation as that they shall not go into needless waste and dilapidation. Now, if $50,000 of this amount shall be diverted from the purpose contemplated by this bill to the construction of batteries in the harbor of Galveston——

Mr. REAGAN. I see that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] is proceeding upon the wrong idea. I ask for an additional appropriation of $50,000 for the construction of this new work; not that $50,000 of the amount here proposed shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. BAKER. Then there is a point of order against the amendment, if it is not too late. I did not so understand the amendment when read, or I should have made the point of order upon it at the time. I understood that the amendment was to appropriate $50,000 of the $100,000 contained in this item, and to divert it to another purpose, which would have been in order under the rules. I submit now that the appropriation of $50,000 in this bill for a new and independent work, not in continuation of any existing work, but an appropriation for the commencement of a new work, is certainly subject to the point of order which I now raise. I trust I am not too late in that, for the reason, as I have explained to the Chair, that I did not understand the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to be to increase the appropriation by $50,000, but to divert $50,000 of the amount here proposed for the purpose indicated.

Mr. REAGAN. I submit that the point of order is too late, after the gentleman has debated the amendment. The point of order should have been made at once, and cannot be made now after time has been taken on both sides in debating the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is too late; and, besides, no points of order were reserved when this bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAKER. Then I desire to oppose the amendment. The proposition is to add $50,000 to the bill for the purpose of starting a new work. I am opposed to that for two or three reasons, which I will briefly state.

In the first place, I am opposed to any general system of constructing fortifications at this time for the harbor defense of our country. I do not believe that we can wisely, in the present transition state of military science touching gunnery, expend any considerable sum of money in this direction. In addition to that, it seems to me that it would be a policy that would bring just animadversion upon Congress if it should enter upon the construction of new works involving so large a sum as $50,000, when other works at other great seaport cities, like Mobile, the mouth of the Mississippi, Charleston, Norfolk, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Portland are in such a condition that those cities are practically as defenseless as the city of Galveston, and where works are already in progress, on the construction of which millions of dollars have been expended, and which, if we are going into a general system of construction of fortifications, ought to be prosecuted to completion as being more needful than at this port of Galveston. I do not know anything about the character of the harbor at Galveston, and would not confidently say anything about that, although I suspect that a large armored vessel would find some difficulty in getting near enough to the city of Galveston to fire a shot into it, or perhaps even near enough to descry the steeples of the city without the aid of a glass. I trust that no change will be made in the bill in this regard.

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] a question before he takes his seat. In the $100,000 of appropriation reported by the committee, was any appropriation contemplated for the harbor of Galveston?

Mr. BAKER. Not specially. Nothing was contemplated for any special work.

Mr. BRIGHT. Did it enter into the estimate?

Mr. BAKER. It did not enter into the estimate of $100,000.

Mr. BRIGHT. Did any of the other harbors enter into the estimate?

Mr. BAKER. No, sir. The bill was framed on this simple theory: that we had expended a large sum of money in the construction of forts and batteries, and that at the present time it was not wise to enter upon any new works, but that we should simply appropriate enough money to preserve works already in progress.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] by reducing the amount to $25,000. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers have both recommended this work, and I am satisfied that it ought to be done.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to reduce the appropriation named in my amendment to $25,000. I wish to say that this project has been twice recommended by the Secretary of War and twice recommended by the Chief of Engineers. They have recommended an appropriation of $50,000 to begin the work. I submit that this is a smaller sum than was ever before recommended to begin a public work of this kind. That is all I have to say on that point. Of course the judgment of the House binds me.

In relation to what was said by the gentleman from Indiana on the other point I desire to say a word before I take my seat. The gentleman says that for places where millions have been spent in fortifying them, it is not proposed by this bill to do more than simply preserve the work already done. Now, is it true, as a matter of public duty and policy, that we cannot build a new fortification without adding to the millions already expended upon old fortifications? My object is to place Galveston on something like an equal footing with other important seaports upon our coast by procuring a small appropriation to commence the building of batteries and the furnishing of guns for the defense of that harbor. If millions have been expended at other places entitled no more to protection than this, it seems to me it forms the most cogent and just reason why the poor sum of $50,000 should be given for this work.

Mr. HAWLEY. My impression is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has really advocated his amendment while nominally on the other side; at any rate, I rise to oppose it.

The gentleman says that the Department estimates for Galveston Harbor $50,000 to begin a new fort. That is quite true; but the Department estimates also for a great variety of fortifications, the aggregate of these estimates being $4,028,500, and $50,000 of this amount being for Galveston alone. Now, the Committee on Appropriations has not reported in favor of giving one dollar of these $4,000,000 thus estimated for. We have not, in this respect, adopted the recommendations of the Department in any instance.

The first paragraph of the bill now under consideration appropriates $100,000 "for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense." We have along our coast a series of very expensive works which are running down. One hundred thousand dollars is a very small sum to be appropriated for their maintenance. There are many valuable works, one-fourth, one-third or one-half completed. If we are to do anything in the way of strengthening our fortifications, we ought to go on with these works. But the Committee on Appropriations, understanding the public sentiment, and knowing, moreover, that the art of defense is undergoing great changes all the time, so that many of these works are now comparatively useless, has not reported a single dollar to be appropriated in this direction, but only $100,000 to keep in repair the works we already have.

Now the gentleman from Texas, in behalf of his particular locality, desires to take a single item out of these estimates of $4,000,000, and would have us adopt that. If we are going to do anything in that line, I beg that the bill may be recommitted, so that we may appropriate an aggregate of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 by making provision for many other places the fortification of which is of equal or greater importance. There are places which need $50,000 a great deal more than that harbor, in the judgment of the engineer and ordnance officers. If we do anything at all in this direction, we should revise the whole system and enter upon a thorough plan of sea-coast fortifications. We are now simply temporizing in this matter. The practical thing that the Committee on Appropriations is seeking is to perfect our armament. Fortifications of some sort can be put up very hastily should an emergency arise. It is not certain but that the very best kind are these immense sand or earth works, which can be put up very rapidly. Our chief want is a better supply of good guns, and we will discuss that when we come to the item relating to that subject. In that particular we do make a little increase on former appropriations, but not beyond what we think is needed. We want a better supply of heavy guns; we cannot begin to effectively arm the fortifications we already have. By this little appropriation of $100,000 we simply keep our immense expenditures heretofore made from going to waste. I submit that we should not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Texas unless we are prepared to go on and make thorough work in the same direction.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILSON to the amendment of Mr. REAGAN, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to amend the pending amendment by striking out the last word. I make this motion simply for the purpose of stating how fully I concur in the views expressed by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] The Committee on Appropriations, without a dissenting voice, I think, in regard to this provision of the bill, agreed that it was neither wise nor necessary at this time that the Government should enter upon any general system of the erection of fortifications for the defense of our coast. In our judgment we are not prepared to do so now; and in view of the changes going on in the modes and means of defense, such a policy would be unwise. Hence, in this bill the committee do not propose to appropriate a single dollar for the improvement or enlargement of existing works, or for the erection of new ones.

As was well remarked by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] if the Committee of the Whole in this single instance should make an appropriation of even $25,000, it would be better to recommit the bill and allow the Committee on Appropriations, at its leisure, and in its discretion, and in its judgment, to make appropriation for all the works of defense which have been estimated for by the War Department. We cannot agree to this one without injustice to others. We should make appropriations for all of them, or else we must reject the present amendment.

As I have already stated, the committee have not thought proper to make appropriation for any one of them. What we have done, Mr. Chairman, is this: we have provided that our works of defense should be kept in repair, and we have accordingly appropriated the amount considered necessary by the Ordnance Department to do that thing, and nothing more.

Why, sir, our best works—those which we presume to be our best, the works of defense in New York Harbor, for instance—are so unfit, as now constructed, to withstand the attacks which could be made upon them by the improved ordnance of the world, that they are deemed almost valueless by competent authorities, unless millions of money should be spent to strengthen them. They are now mere shells to resist the destructive force of the weight and character of the ordnance which could be brought to bear against them. We are not prepared to enter upon these improvements now. What we most need, sir, is improvement in our cannon, that they should be made more effective; and what we further need is efficiency and greater perfection in our torpedo service; for, sir, in my judgment, and in that of the committee, the best and surest defense for our sea-coast and all our harbors is based upon the protection which the torpedo system promises. It would be impossible to destroy or even disable, it may be, the enormous iron-clads which might be sent to attack us by several European powers by any ordnance which we now have. The effective service alone which it might render would be as auxiliary to the torpedoes. The attacking vessel or vessels might be engaged and fired on from our forts and batteries and so hindered and detained within a certain range that our torpedoes might be exploded with effect.

Therefore, sir, I trust that in this condition of affairs the request made by the gentleman from Texas will not be granted, and that his well-known influence and the general desire here to accommodate him and to do his section kindness will not lead this committee away from doing that which the full Committee on Appropriations deem best for the whole country under existing circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand a division of the committee on that amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, $225,000.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of deriving some information on this subject. I move to strike out the words "for the conversion of smooth-bore guns."

Mr. BAKER. I wish the amendment of the gentleman from Texas might be read so I can understand it exactly.

Mr. REAGAN. I move simply to strike out the words "smooth-bore guns." I am not conversant with ordnance. I have seen some guns. I understand this appropriation is for the purpose of converting smooth-bore guns into rifled cannon. That is done, I suppose, in the hope we will thereby be able to supersede the necessity for fortifications. I appeal to military men who have seen guns, and seen them used, that if you take a smooth-bore gun, with the size of the bore it ordinarily has, and take it in relation to the amount of metal in it, and then rifle it, I ask whether thereby its efficiency is not materially decreased? Why, sir, I would as soon stand before such a gun as by the side of it when fired with a full charge.

If that is not a correct statement, I appeal to gentlemen more familiar with cannon than I am how they are going to give strength to a smooth-bore gun which has been rifled and the size of the bore increased when it is loaded with a heavier projectile in order to fill its caliber?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will, Mr. Chairman, by leave of the gentleman from Indiana, who has charge of this bill, explain this process which the gentleman from Texas very evidently does not understand.

We have now a very valuable lot of old smooth-bore guns, chiefly 10-inch. The gentleman is quite right in saying that if you take a 10-inch gun and weaken it by rifling it will not stand as heavy charge of powder as before, and especially if you should put also a heavier projectile in it. But he does not understand the process. They take these old smooth-bore guns, and, if necessary, ream them out to make a true bore; then they insert a steel tube, reducing the diameter from ten inches to eight inches, and that tubing is rifled.

Now, whether the gentleman thinks or does not think they will stand fire, the fact is that seven or eight hundred heavy charges have been fired out of converted guns of that sort. And it may be added that the projectile fired from them does not vary much in weight from that fired from them before the conversion. In the 10-inch gun, the round ball approximates one hundred and twenty-eight pounds, and while the caliber of the gun is reduced by the tube from ten inches to eight, the projectile used in the rifle is elongated so that it is something like the weight of the round ball.

Mr. BAKER. It weighs one hundred and fifty.

Mr. HAWLEY. My friend says one hundred and fifty pounds; a little larger than the old one, then. It appears by experiment that the guns are strengthened by the steel lining; the caliber is reduced in size.

But there is another important consideration. I was myself prejudiced against this alteration, but am now satisfied that it is practicable and useful. A new factor has come in to make it practicable, very fortunately for us, an improvement in the compounding and manufacture of powder. If you take a charge of the old fine rifle powder—with which the gentleman from Texas was familiar when he used to kill squirrels—that would knock the gun all to pieces, whether smooth-bore or rifle, while it would not send the projectile with remarkable force; but they have now a larger-grained slow-burning powder, and it turns out that they can get a greater projectile force with less pressure per square inch than before by one-half or two-thirds—a great reduction in pressure as shown by close tests. So it is practicable to take these old smooth-bore 10-inch guns, line them with steel tubing rifled, and by using large grained slow-burning powder obtain a greater force of projection with less strain. The gentleman can go to the Sandy Hook proving-ground, as I have done, and see for himself. Besides, Mr. Chairman, they can make breech-loaders of them if necessary.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to say that my friend from Connecticut is mistaken about there being a steel lining in these smooth-bore guns—it is made of wrought iron.

Mr. HAWLEY. True; but experiments have been made in both.

Mr. KITCHIN. I renew the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask a question. We have two systems of torpedoes, one by the Navy and one by the Army. I know, when I used to be more familiar with appropriation bills than I am now, there was always danger of collision between the two systems. I see no reference here to any part of the naval torpedo service and I wish to ask the gentleman whether there has been any arrangement by which appropriation for the naval torpedo system is provided in some other bill. If not, it seems this is exclusively in the Army interests, as it ought to be, but I will be obliged if the gentleman will state the status of the question.

Mr. BAKER. As I understand it this provision applies exclusively to the interests of the Army. That portion intended for the use of the Navy is provided for in another bill.

Mr. CLYMER. In the Navy appropriation bill.

Mr. BAKER. That is my understanding. I desire to say this clause in reference to torpedoes has stood in this shape and has been of this amount, $50,000, for the last four years.

If there is no further amendment to be offered I move the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CONVERSE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BAKER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD as part of the debates some remarks which he had prepared on the subject of the fortification bill. [See Appendix.]

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUBBELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and moved its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBELL. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, pending that motion, I move that all general debate be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The House then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HOOKER in the chair.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBELL. I propose merely to explain the provisions of this bill, so far as there is an increase of appropriations over the sum appropriated in the bill of last year. There was appropriated for pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, the sum of $29,366,000. That was exclusive of the amount appropriated for arrears of pensions under the arrearages act. This bill appropriates $32,404,000, making an increase of $3,038,000 over the bill of last year.

This increase is caused by various reasons. We have now on the pension list 125,150 Army invalids; 80,174 Army widows, children, and dependent relatives; 1,844 Navy invalids; 1,772 Navy widows, and children, and dependent relatives; 11,621 surviving soldiers of the war of 1812; 21,194 widows of deceased soldiers of the war of 1812; making a total on the list to-day of 242,755.

During the year up to the date of the Commissioners' report there has been a great increase on the list. There have been added to the list during the year, of new names, 31,346; persons restored for various causes, 908; making a total of additions of 32,254. There have been dropped from the roll during the year for various causes, 13,497, making an increase to the list of the year of 18,757.

In addition to this, and as one reason why this appropriation is provided in this bill, the Commissioner of Pensions informs us in his report that up to the date of his report he estimates there are 200,000 cases pending now in which pensions are claimed, and that by the end of the fiscal year that number will be increased to 250,000. Thus, sir, it must be apparent that there will not only be an increase of names placed upon the roll, but that increase will be much greater than it has been in previous years, for reasons which I will briefly state.

The act of January 25, 1879, not only granted arrears of pensions to persons already on the rolls, but provided that pensions thereafter granted should date from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim was granted; and it also repealed section 4717 of the Revised Statutes, which barred claims for pensions unless presented within a given specified time. And the act of March 3, 1879, gave a wider scope to the act of January 25, 1879, by providing that persons should be included within its provisions who were drafted or enlisted to serve in the war of the rebellion but who died or incurred disability from causes originating after the cessation of hostilities and before being mustered out of the service. It must be remembered also that all the persons who will be added from the two hundred thousand claimants whose claims will be pending at the end of the year will receive not only their payment for the year, but payment for all the years intervening between the date of their discharge and the time of the granting of the pension.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general debate has expired.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan be permitted to complete his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent in Committee of the Whole to extend the time even by unanimous consent.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, and read the first paragraph, as follows:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph, and yield my time to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL.]

Mr. HUBBELL. I desire to add just one word more, in order to state another reason why the Committee on Appropriations recommended the full estimate. The Commissioner in his report informs us that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, there will be a deficiency of $5,000,000 for the Army pensions, and a deficiency of $30,000 for the Navy pensions. These reasons induced the committee to insert in this bill the exact and precise amount estimated by the Department. The bill appropriates $31,475,000 for the Army pensions; $253,000 for fees and allowances; $575,000 for Navy pensions, and $101,000 for fees of examining surgeons.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to remark that the deficiency referred to by the gentleman from Michigan did not grow out of any failure on the part of Congress to appropriate the estimates.

Mr. HUBBELL. Not at all. That deficiency occurred for the reason that the estimates for the year were in before the arrearage of pensions bill was passed, and it was no fault of the last House that that deficiency occurred.

Mr. CLYMER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For fees of examining-surgeons, as provided by the several acts of Congress, $101,000: Provided, That a fee of $1, and no more, shall be paid to the examining surgeon for each examination of a pensioner, as provided by law, except when the examination is made by a board of surgeons, in which case the fees now allowed by law shall be paid.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the proviso in the paragraph just read. I make this motion that I may ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what the fee now is that he proposes to make $1?

Mr. HUBBELL. It is $1. We only re-enact it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I suggest, then, this proviso is unnecessary. It is simply that a fee of $1, which is now provided for by law, shall be allowed except when the examination is made by a board of surgeons, in which case the fees now allowed by law shall be paid. Whole classes of fees are provided for by general law, and I insist the proviso is simply an unnecessary thing.

Mr. HUBBELL. The fees of examining surgeons were fixed in the last appropriation bill and ended with that appropriation bill.

Mr. CLYMER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say it was necessary to continue this proviso in this bill because the only law on this subject now is the provision made last year with reference to the appropriation then made. If this proviso is not continued in this bill the fees would go back to what they were formerly, $2 in each case.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota move to strike out the proviso?

Mr. DUNNELL. After the explanation which has been given, I withdraw the motion to strike out.

Mr. BREWER. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the words "one dollar," in line 27, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two dollars," as the fee to be allowed examining surgeons. That is the amount which was formerly allowed for examinations.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order upon the proposed amendment that it will change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. No reservation of points of order was made upon this bill in the House at the time it was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BREWER. I do not desire to take up much of the time of the committee in discussing my proposed amendment. Until the last appropriation bill was passed the Commissioner of Pensions allowed a fee of $2 to examining surgeons. I think that fee was small enough. Since the change was made I have personally received more than fifty letters from different examining surgeons throughout the country, calling my attention to the change made last year, and insisting that the original amount, $2, was a very small sum to be allowed for the services they rendered. It strikes me that that sum was small enough, and I think we should restore the law as it formerly existed.

Mr. WARNER. The reduction of examination fees from $2 to $1 was made, as I understand, by the last appropriation bill, and I have heard no complaint made of the change. I am told that at such places as the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio, for instance, one hundred or two hundred persons are examined in a single day; and certainly in such cases as those a one-dollar fee is sufficient. I think the amount should be left as reduced by the last appropriation bill, to which this bill corresponds; that is, $1.

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply desire to corroborate what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has just said. There has been no complaint of the change made last year; none from the Bureau of Pensions and none in the Committee on Appropriations. It was the unanimous opinion of that committee that no practical difficulty has grown out of the change made last year; and I hope there will be no amendment adopted of the kind now proposed.

Mr. BREWER. It is not at all strange that no complaint on that point was made to the Committee on Appropriations. It is an anomaly, or at least it ought to be, for the Committee on Appropriations to attempt to regulate this fee. The subject belongs to the Committee on Invalid Pensions if to any committee. Yet the Committee on Appropriations in this bill are carrying out the same idea which they attempted during the last session of this Congress.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] says that some two or three hundred persons are examined in a day at the Soldiers' Home in Dayton. Where that is the case perhaps a one-dollar fee is sufficient. But that is not the case all over the country. Take my own town, for instance, where there is an examining surgeon. Perhaps a dozen or two dozen men are examined in the course of a year. Now, the surgeon is compelled to fix a day when he will be in his office, in order to accommodate the men who desire to be examined. That case is entirely different from the one stated by the gentleman from Ohio, where two or three hundred men are right on the ground to be examined.

As I have already said, I have had letters from more than fifty different examining surgeons protesting against the change made on this point in the last appropriation bill. In accordance with their request, I have introduced a bill fixing the amount and have had it referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, where the matter properly belongs.

Mr. HUBBELL. I hope this amendment will not prevail. There is no demand for it in the Pension Office. The Commissioner says that the different departments of his office are running well now. I am sure that for every surgeon now appointed as an examining surgeon at the rate fixed by law, twenty could be found willing to take the place at the same rate.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BREWER; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, noes 60.

No further count being called for, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move that the committee rise and report the pending bill to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOKER reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, and with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HUBBELL called the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUBBELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MILLS. Before that motion is put, I ask consent to introduce some bills for reference.

There was no objection.

J. H. DILLARD.

Mr. MILLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2806) for the relief of J. H. Dillard; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CAPTAIN JOHN G. TODD.

Mr. MILLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2807) referring the claim of the legal representatives of Captain John G. Todd, of Texas, to the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. NEWBERRY for four days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. YOCUM indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave for withdrawal of papers from the files of the House was granted in the following cases, no adverse reports having been presented:

To Mr. PACHECO, in the case of Anna E. Polk;

To Mr. HOUSE, in the case of Jane F. King; and

To Mr. VANCE, in the case of Paulina Jones.

LIEUTENANT F. M. H. KENDRICK.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Lieutenant F. M. H. Kendrick, Seventh Infantry, for recognition as second lieutenant Company K, Thirty-First Massachusetts Volunteers, from December 24, 1861, to February 19, 1862, and for reimbursement of certain money; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, relative to condemned cannon for monumental purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. MILLS in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, is this objection day?

The CHAIRMAN. It is consideration day.

JULIET LEEF.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $20,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for indemnity and compensation to Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, to be paid to them, or to their legal representative, in full for losses and damages sustained by the said Henry Leef in his lifetime, in consequence of the illegal seizure of the bark Mary Teresa by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry Leef and John McKee, submit the following report:

From the evidence referred to your committee with the memorial of the claimants, it appears that while Henry Leef, a citizen of the United States, was engaged in business in Baltimore as ship-owner and merchant, he became the owner of a vessel which had been wrecked in Chesapeake Bay, condemned, and sold at public auction in the city of Baltimore. This purchase and ownership was immediately made known to the Government of the United States, together with a request for information and instructions from the proper department as to the requisite and necessary formalities of clearance, &c., to enable Henry Leef to send this vessel to a foreign port for sale. By letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Leef was informed that the vessel, being of foreign build, could not receive papers of any description under the registering or licensing laws of the United States; but he was referred to the consul of the country to which it was proposed to send the vessel for information as to the proper formalities and evidence of ownership. The vessel was accordingly cleared in conformity with the usual formalities, not only in respect to the laws of the United States, but also to those of Brazil, the place of her destination. She reached the port of Pernambuco, where all the requisite and usual formalities of entrance, &c., were complied with, and the customary facilities of the consul of the United States rendered. After landing a portion of her cargo, she proceeded, with a view to a more favorable market, to the port of Bahia, where the usual formalities were complied with in respect to the United States consulate at that port. But it further appears that the consul at this port pronounced her to be confiscated to the Government of the United States, in consequence of her not being furnished with or presenting the necessary registers or papers to prove her nationality, notwithstanding the fullest and most satisfactory proofs of ownership and citizenship, duly authenticated, were presented to the said consul, and by him returned to the Secretary of State of the United States.

Accordingly, the bark Mary Teresa was taken possession of by the consul of the United States in Bahia, and under his directions and authority was sent to the port of Philadelphia, and was delivered up to the authorities of the United States, after which, the particulars of the case having been received at Washington, the vessel was released by the authorities of the United States, and the proceedings of the United States consul disavowed; all which proceedings of the authorities of the United States have involved the memorialists in serious damage and loss, fully set forth in their details in the papers accompanying the memorial.

From the correspondence which took place between our consul, Mr. Tyler, and our minister at Rio, and our then Secretary of State, it appears that our minister disapproved of the conduct of our consul in seizing and detaining the vessel. The consul, however, having determined to carry out his design to treat the vessel as confiscated to the Government, William McKee, as supercargo and representative of the owner, addressed a letter to the consul, in which, after reciting the action of the consul in reference to said vessel, he says:

"I have no recourse but to abandon her, which I hereby do to you, as consul of the United States, and as the representative of the Government thereof; hereby solemnly protesting against you, as consul of the United States and the representative thereof, for the value of the said vessel, the bark Mary Teresa, owned by Henry Leef, of Baltimore, of two hundred and fifty-one tons burden, and for all damages accruing to all and every person concerned in said vessel or cargo, which I estimate at thirty thousand silver dollars."

It thus appears that a wrong has been done by the representative agent of the Government in a foreign land, while in the exercise of his functions, and acting in behalf of and in the name of the United States.

This case has heretofore been five times passed upon and favorably reported to the House; and this committee now, for the sixth time, after a careful review of the evidence, concur with the opinion that it is a case in which Congress should interpose to grant relief.

The committee have examined a large number of cases in which the Government has acknowledged its liability in analogous cases, and select the following as sufficiently conclusive of the past action of the Government:

March 31, 1814. Act to reimburse Samuel Ellis, marshal district of Maine, amount of judgment recovered against him for seizing certain flour.

February 27, 1815. Act to reimburse Joshua Sands, collector of New York, amount of judgment recovered against him for seizing certain vessels.

May 19, 1824. Act to reimburse Archibald Clark, collector at Saint Mary's, amount of judgment recovered against him for detaining ship Apollo.

July 14, 1832. Act to pay the amount of certain judgments recovered against the marshal for the district of Pennsylvania, for seizing certain teas, to the parties interested therein.

March 2, 1833. Act to reimburse Cyrenius Hall, collector at Sandusky, amount of judgment recovered against him for seizing a vessel.

June 30, 1834. Act to reimburse W. C. H. Waddell amount of judgment recovered against him, as marshal, for seizing certain brandies.

July 7, 1838. Act to reimburse David Geletin, collector at New York, amount of judgment recovered against him for seizing the ship American Eagle.

The only other case necessary to refer to is that of John O'Sullivan, whose vessel was seized by John M. Forbes, the commercial and political agent of the Government of the United States at Buenos Ayres. The case was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Woodbury, by the Senate, and, after his report thereon, an act was passed providing for compensation, July 2, 1836. Mr. Woodbury's report will be found in Document No. 5, Twenty-third Congress, second session, and is dated December 8, 1834. The liabilities of the Government for the acts of its agents, as therein maintained, "extend only to such acts as arise from gross negligence in discharge of official duties, or from omission to perform them; and even in these cases the persons suffering should either resort to the agent early, and in a suit with him establish his liability and the amount of damage, or resort early to the Government, and make out a very clear case, so that redress might be had by the Government on his personal responsibility on his official bonds and sureties, if any exist;" and the report concludes: "In many cases the Government has refused to indemnify the claimants themselves, the original sufferers, unless first showing, with clearness, gross neglect or wrong by the officers in discharge of their official obligations." Mr. Woodbury was of the opinion that the parties had been guilty of laches. He says "the vessel was sold in this country in the beginning of the year 1824. The first petition presented to Congress was not until the year 1828."

In the case now presented to the consideration of the House the parties have been prompt in the pursuit of their rights. Within sixty days after the vessel had reached Philadelphia and was discharged, the memorialists had presented their claims to this body.

It would seem to be a proper policy, as well as a duty of the Government, to protect its officers from liability whenever they act in good faith in the assertion of its rights.

Sir William Scott, in the case of the action in adjusting a question of damage arising out of an alleged capture, says:

"It does not appear that Captain Capel is chargeable with having acted from any corrupt or malicious motives; and if, as I believe to be the case, he has acted from a sense of duty and obedience to orders, I can have no doubt will be indemnified upon a proper representation to government."

This is both a strong and peculiar case. The consul at Bahia was the sole representative of the Government at Bahia. There was no appeal from his decision in the custody and management of the vessel. It is better that the Government should hold itself responsible for his acts than, by denying its responsibility, to invite that resistance which the common law justifies in the protection of property against trespassers.

The subject is one of great importance to the protection of our commerce, as is evidenced by the petitions in this case from our principal commercial marts, signed by their most distinguished merchants.

Our Government has not failed to demand indemnity from foreign countries when the rights of our merchants have been violated by their officials, and it would seem that a like indemnity is due to those who have suffered from our own.

Your committee therefore, following the precedent made by a former Congress, in the case of O'Sullivan above cited, report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case, so far as I understand it, does not show that the action of the consul was illegal, was grossly negligent or wrong in any respect. It simply shows that when the vessel came back to the United States under the order of the consul it was released and returned to the parties. I think the report should have stated, or perhaps the committee may state orally, the facts in regard to that matter. It is very curious that every case cited in the report, unless it be the last one, was a case of the indemnification of an officer who had been sued and held personally liable for the damages claimed. In this case there is no proof of any damage except from the assertion of the parties. I should be very unwilling to vote for this bill unless from some source I can understand that the action of the consul came within the decision which has been quoted here and within the usual rule of law. If it was a mere exercise of power under a mistake, without gross negligence, without plain wrong, then the authorities cited have no application whatever.

There is nothing to show that there has been any examination or any statement on the part of anybody of the amount of damage. It is inconsistent with my ideas of right that the mere detention of a vessel and sending her back to her own country and releasing her here can have resulted in damage to the amount of $30,000, as claimed, or $20,000, as reported by the committee. Within the last few years that sum would have bought, or more than bought, a vessel of the tonnage mentioned here.

Now, I should like some one who knows about this to inform the House why $20,000 should be paid for sending this vessel back from Brazil to the port where it was owned in the United States, whether with cargo and freight or not, I do not know; but I do know that for the last few years and within the time mentioned in that report, our ships have been lying idle at the docks and could not have been sold for half the sum named here—in many cases not at all. This may be too good a bargain for this vessel. The report shows that the vessel was sent abroad at any rate to be sold in a foreign country. Now the parties may receive more than the value of the vessel and yet retain the ownership. They may eat their cake and still have it, so far as anything appears in this report. If any gentleman is familiar with the facts I hope he will inform the committee that we may not vote away $20,000 for the detention of a small vessel and sending her back safely to her home. I understand the vessel's tonnage was only two hundred and fifty tons.

Mr. BEALE. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee, and especially that of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] I will endeavor to give an outline of the history of this case, and I undertake to say in my place that no case of greater hardship is presented in the whole records of congressional legislation than is presented in the case now submitted for consideration.

In 1847 a French bark, Mary Teresa, was wrecked in Chesapeake Bay, condemned, and sold. She was purchased by Henry Leef, a shipbuilder in the city of Baltimore. After he had fully repaired and refitted the vessel, he addressed a letter to the then Secretary of the Treasury, inquiring what papers he must secure in order to send this vessel to a foreign country for sale. Under our license and registry laws the vessel could obtain no papers from our authorities. He was informed that all that was needed would be a bill of sale showing his ownership, and that he must call upon the representative of the government of the country to which he proposed to send the vessel and ascertain what were the formalities of law necessary in that country to accomplish the purpose which he had in view—the sale of the vessel. In pursuance of those instructions the vessel was loaded with a cargo of flour at Baltimore and Richmond, and, under charge of a supercargo empowered to dispose of both cargo and ship, was sent to Pernambuco, in Brazil.

She reached that port, discharged there a part of her cargo, and, finding there was a better market in Bahia, she sailed for that port to discharge the residue. She was there seized by the consul of our Government. It was alleged she was liable to confiscation because of the fact she had no license from the authorities of the United States. The consul communicated with the minister at Rio, and was informed by him that his action was illegal, that he had no authority to seize the vessel; but, notwithstanding the advice of the minister at Rio, he persisted in his purpose and proceeded to seize the vessel. The supercargo surrendered her under protest, protesting against the consul to the United States Government for the illegal seizure of his property. Captains were called upon, as usual in cases of that sort, by the consul, and the vessel was valued. The supercargo fixed the amount of damage which he had sustained at that date at $30,000, as appears in the report which has been submitted.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman if that was not before she was sent away from that port?

Mr. BEALE. I did not hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. CONGER. Was not the protest made and was not the amount of damages fixed before she had been sent from the port of South America where she was?

Mr. BEALE. No, sir; the protest was made at Bahia, where the vessel was seized.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; and $30,000 damages fixed before she was sent away from that port.

Mr. BEALE. Of course, then was the moment at which the possession of the vessel was turned over to the consul of the United States. That was the proper and only time at which this protest could have been made.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BEALE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. What was the cargo of the vessel at the time of the seizure?

Mr. BEALE. Flour.

Mr. BROWNE. What became of it?

Mr. BEALE. It was sold.

Mr. BROWNE. By whom?

Mr. BEALE. By the supercargo.

Mr. BROWNE. The vessel was then returned to the United States.

Mr. BEALE. I will proceed to give you that information.

Mr. BROWNE. The question I desire to ask is this: How does the committee reach the opinion as to the amount of damages sustained by the owner of the vessel; what entered into the computation of the committee?

Mr. BEALE. The papers submitted by the consul himself to the Government of the United States, every particle of testimony in regard to the amount of damage, every particle of testimony in regard to the seizure of the vessel—all were furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom the whole papers were transmitted by the consul in 1847.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman from Virginia makes a mistake; not by the Secretary of the Treasury, but by the Secretary of State.

Mr. BEALE. Yes; I mean by the Secretary of State.

Mr. BARBER. What was the value of the vessel at the time of the seizure?

Mr. BEALE. I think just the value fixed by the report, $20,000.

Mr. BARBER. Did we keep her after we got her over here—did we retain her after we got her home?

Mr. BEALE. If you will bear with me I will give the history further.

Mr. ACKLEN. I beg to correct my colleague. It was $15,000, and not $20,000.

Mr. BEALE. Yes, sir. After the seizure of the vessel by the consul and the surrender by the supercargo to the consul, the latter placed the vessel in charge of a captain and crew and sent her back to the United States. She came to the port of Philadelphia, and the Secretary of State directed she should be returned to the city of Baltimore and handed over to her owner. The vessel was returned to the city of Baltimore. A libel was filed by the crew who had been placed in charge of this vessel at Bahia, and under the direction of the admiralty court the vessel was sold, and the claim, as set up, was credited by the proceeds of the sale after deducting the costs of the court of admiralty and the wages which had been paid to the seamen. After the sale of the vessel at Baltimore the claimant came for relief to Congress, thirty-two years ago, with a petition asking that he should have payment for the damages which he had sustained.

In 1849 Mr. Grinnell, of Massachusetts, reported from the Committee on Commerce a bill giving him the entire amount of damages he had sustained—$26,000. The bill was reported unanimously from that committee.

In the Thirty-first Congress Mr. Daniel, of Virgina, from the same committee, reported a bill giving to the claimant $26,000, the amount of damages he alleged he had sustained. These bills included, in addition to the actual loss by the owner of the vessel, profits which the supercargo expected to make.

In the Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Congresses Mr. Eustis, of Louisiana, with entire unanimity on the part of the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill giving to this claimant $26,000, which had been reported in his favor originally in 1849.

In 1874, in the Forty-third Congress, this bill was again referred to the Committee of Claims, when Mr. Williams, of Indiana, with the unanimous consent of that committee, reported a bill to the House allowing the petitioner $26,000.

In 1878, in the Forty-fifth Congress, Mr. Roberts, of Maryland, reported a bill in which no fixed sum was allowed, but in which the matter was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, with direction to settle the amount on the principles of equity and justice.

And now, sir, in 1879, in the Forty-sixth Congress, this bill comes again before this body from the Committee on Commerce, sifted, thoroughly sifted, several different times by committees of this House, but unanimously reported favorably in every instance, I believe, but one.

It is true, and the precedents referred to in the report go to show it, that the general rule established in cases of this character has been that a suit should be instituted by the claimant against the officer of the Government, that the claim should be judicially investigated, and the amount of judgment obtained against the officer should be paid by the Government. And when I first took up this claim I thought that probably was a fatal objection, but the subject had been thoroughly examined by quite a distinguished Senator as early as 1835, who I think lays down correctly the principle which should be adopted in cases of this character; and, as in the case referred to the circumstances were much less strong than in the case we are now considering, I will ask that a portion of the Senate report of 1835 be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It has certainly been the most common course for individuals claiming redress from Government for the acts of its agents to resort to a court of law in the first instance and fix their liability. Whether this be the safest course for Government, and whether it be one which in ordinary cases should be resorted to before application is made to Congress, need not be discussed, as, admitting the rule to the whole extent put forward by the Secretary, there are exceptions growing out of it which, in the opinion of this committee, cannot be disregarded. And this case, in their opinion, fairly presents one of these exceptions. In little more than a year after the injury complained of the husband of the petitioner and father of the children who are interested in the success of the present demand perished by shipwreck on the southern coast of this continent. His wife was at that time in Europe, where she had accompanied him from the United States in prosecution of a voyage which contemplated first going there and thence to the south seas.

She appears to have been left in humble circumstances with a large family of children; and it is not surprising that so situated she should not have prosecuted her case with the vigor and success which might have attended the efforts of those who are more favorably circumstanced, but in the opinion of the committee a complete exception is established by the fact that no opportunity was presented to her to bring suit in the United States against Mr. Forbes. He remained at Buenos Ayres until his death, and there is no obligation on an American citizen to follow public agents into a foreign country, where they are placed by the Government, in order that a liability be established for which that Government is ultimately to be responsible. The objections to such a course are many, strong, and so obvious that it is deemed unnecessary to set them out in detail.

Mr. BEALE. The committee will perceive that excepts cases from the principle which requires judicial investigation where the fact is that the United States officer who had been guilty of illegal seizure was not within the reach of a suit by the citizen. In this case Mr. Tyler lived in Brazil. He was consul at Bahia, and assuredly there was no obligation whatever on Leef to pursue in the judicial tribunals of Brazil an action against the consul for this illegal seizure. Nor do the practice and precedents of the Government require any such thing to be done. He did what was in his power. Immediately after the occurrence of these events he came before this body with his petition. It was the only door open to him. It was the only means of redress which was possibly available to him; and it does seem to me passing strange that a claim of this character should be opposed, a claim which reaches beyond the mere private interest of the ship-owner and lays hold of a great public interest, for it is to the interest of American shippers that they should be protected in foreign countries. And while our Government has never hesitated to demand of any foreign government ample compensation for any wrong that has been done to an American ship-owner abroad, assuredly we should be equally anxious to protect our own citizens against wrong done by our own Government. I trust that it will be the pleasure of this committee unanimously to do this tardy justice to this dying widow.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question.

Mr. BEALE. I yield for a question.

Mr. DUNN. What do the committee find to be the actual damages in this present case?

Mr. BEALE. After sifting the case most thoroughly the committee find the actual damage to be $20,000.

Mr. DUNN. Do they find that to be the value of the property?

Mr. BEALE. The cost of the vessel was $15,000; the actual damage was $20,000. In that amount no speculative or consequential damages are included.

I wish merely to say further that in preference to following the precedent set in the case that has been alluded to, and referring this matter to the Secretary of the Treasury after the claimant had been here for thirty years, we thought it best to undertake judicial functions ourselves and ascertain what was the actual amount of damages the party had sustained, excluding from the amount all speculative or consequential damages.

Mr. McLANE. I should not consider it necessary to add anything to what has been said by the gentleman from Virginia were it not for the inquiry made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] as to the manner in which the amount of damages was made up, and as to the evidence before the committee upon that point I desire to say to the gentleman from Michigan that this sum of $20,000 is taken from the account of losses rendered by the claimant, that being the supercargo's claim of $33,000. The committee, as has been stated, rejected the items in that account for consequential damages, such for instance as the difference between the price of flour as he actually sold it at Bahia and the price he might have got for it if he had been allowed to go on with his vessel to the market he was proceeding to or to Rio. But the committee did allow him the actual loss of his vessel at the price it was estimated to be worth in the port of Bahia. That value was ascertained by an appraisement under the direction of the consul at the port of Bahia, and the estimated value of the vessel was $15,000. It was a full-rigged bark, bought in the port or near the port of Baltimore, in Chesapeake Bay, a wreck refitted by Mr. Leef, but because it was a foreign vessel, not entitled to American papers, as he was advised by the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom he made application, but entitled to go to sea as his property, he, an American citizen, having bought the property, went to sea with the custom-house proof that he was a citizen and that the property did belong to him, and as he was further instructed by the Treasury Department—not by the State Department but by the Treasury Department—that it was entitled to take the American flag. That it is true was a disputed question. But although it be a disputed question, masters of vessels have been instructed by the Treasury Department that they commit no offense at least in carrying the flag, the proof of ownership being the only papers they carry.

Now, Mr. Leef went to sea with that proof of ownership, and carried the American flag because the vessel was his property; and the committee have recognized that as an American ship-master he had a right, owning the vessel and carrying the certificate from the custom-house that he did own the vessel, to carry the flag.

Now as to the seizure. The American consul, Mr. Tyler, believed that Mr. Leef had no right to carry the flag and that he had forfeited his vessel because of carrying the flag. I have upon my desk, and will cause to be read if the committee desire to hear it, the entire correspondence between Mr. Tyler, the consul, and the Department of State and the American minister at Rio. The American minister at Rio entreated Mr. Tyler not to send the ship to the United States, pointed out to him the damage he would do to her owner, and treated it as a case in regard to which he had no instructions to give and with which he would not interfere. He advised Mr. Tyler to keep the ship at Bahia until he could receive instructions from the Secretary of State at Washington. Mr. Tyler, however, acting as he had a right to act, independent of his minister, who refused to take it upon himself to interfere, sent her to the port of Philadelphia and reported the case to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State replied, and I have his letter before me, that it was a case not covered by the law at all, and refused to take possession of the vessel, and turned her over again to Mr. Leef.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question at that point about the legality of the selling of the vessel. The point I fail, for one at least, to see is this: It appears that the entire cargo went back to the possession of the owner, and that the vessel, when she was returned to the port of Philadelphia, was turned over to the owner, so that the owner of the vessel came into possession of the vessel and cargo. Now, what I fail to see is where the item of damages comes in. What constitutes the damage?

Mr. McLANE. When I have finished my answer to the gentleman from Michigan I will reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PRICE. My question is, in what does the damage consist?

Mr. McLANE. I will reply to that. I am now addressing myself to what I understood to be the objection taken by the gentleman from Michigan as to the legality of the seizure. Now, I think that the committee will find this a very clear case. The vessel being the property of Henry Leef, not being entitled to a register, not enabled to go into any trade between this country and a foreign country as an American vessel, he goes off with her to Brazil, because that is a good market for such vessels; and he carried a cargo of flour, because flour was a good cargo to carry to Brazil.

Now, on his way to Brazil he is arrested by the American consul, his ship is taken away from him, and his cargo is sold, as all such cargoes are sold, at a disadvantage. Every practical man knows that a cargo sold under such circumstances is always sold at a disadvantage; there is some loss on the cargo. Now the committee as to the sum of $15,000 did take into consideration the difference between the price of flour at Bahia and the price of flour at Rio Janeiro.

Mr. PRICE. Does it appear what that price was?

Mr. McLANE. I think that the committee in making up the sum took into consideration that item.

Mr. PRICE. It would be satisfactory to the House to know what number of barrels of flour constituted the cargo, and the difference in the price.

Mr. McLANE. I think the difference amounted to about $1,100. I beg the gentleman not to interrupt me until I have answered the other gentleman.

Mr. PRICE. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman; I merely wish to understand the question.

Mr. McLANE. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure when I have replied to the other gentleman; it will be my duty as well as my pleasure to do so.

As to the point of legality; there is no question at all that the ship was entitled to carry the proof of ownership, and that it is the practice of our Treasury Department to advise American citizens owning foreign-built ships, bought as wrecks or bought in the open market, that when they do go to a foreign port, although they cannot take an American register, they can take a certificate of ownership and carry the American flag.

Now, when the consul of the United States seized this vessel he seized her without authority of law. I beg the committee to give their attention to that point. There is no man on either side of the House who would for a moment hesitate either to give a remedy against a public officer or to compensate the individual wronged. Upon that point the law is clear, and the practice of the Government is clear. Either you yourself sue your public officer upon his bond and pay the damages, or you set the damaged man to sue the public officer.

Now, in this case the public officer was advised; but what remedy had Henry Leef against the consul of the United States in the port of Bahia? This claimant was guilty of no delay. The moment his vessel was returned and the Government of the United States decided that it had been illegally seized he applied to the Government for relief.

The Secretary of State as well as the Secretary of the Treasury recognized that a wrong had been done, but they left it to this legislative body to remedy it. It is an appeal to the grace of the Government. The Committee on Commerce do not understand that there is any other claim in this case but one of grace. There is no other claim presented. It rests with this Congress to give relief to this man or to leave him to pursue the consul of the United States who was at that time at Bahia.

If it be the pleasure of this committee, satisfied that the law was violated, satisfied that a damage was done and done because of the ignorance of its own officer, to refuse this man relief, then they will be doing what no civilized government in the world will justify, although it may imitate the example. It is admitted that where a public officer has violated the law—and I want the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to what I now say—it is admitted that when a public officer has violated the law, and the man who is damaged sues the public officer and obtains judgment against him, then the Government, without hesitation, appropriates money to indemnify the public officer.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Just at this particular point, allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Do you maintain that the Government is responsible for the torts of its officers?

Mr. McLANE. I say so.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. You do? Very well, then; I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read the opinion of the Supreme Court on that very point, which the gentleman will find in 8 Wallace, page 274.

Mr. McLANE. I did not say legally responsible.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Will you allow that opinion to be read?

Mr. McLANE. I do not mean to say that the Government is legally responsible for the torts of its officers; the Government is not legally responsible. I stated explicitly that this was an appeal to the grace of the Government.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am speaking of the legal liability of the Government for the acts of its officers.

Mr. McLANE. I do not make any such claim.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. On that point, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. McLANE. I have made no such claim; it is not necessary to address any such inquiry to me. I stated to the committee what was the practice of all civilized governments, especially of Great Britain. I have here in this very report the opinion of Sir William Scott, where he says explicitly that when an officer acted conscientiously and honorably, though he acted in ignorance of the law, it was the duty of the government to indemnify him when the damaged man obtained a judgment against him. That is what I said.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Will you allow me to have read what the Supreme Court has said on that question?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly I will.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Will the Clerk be kind enough to read what I have marked? Or, rather, I will read it myself for the benefit of the gentleman. I read from the case of Gibbons vs. United States:

> But it is not to be disguised that this case is an attempt, under the assumption of an implied contract, to make the Government responsible for the unauthorized acts of its officers, those acts being in themselves torts. No government has ever held itself liable to individuals for the misfeasance, laches, or unauthorized exercise of power by its officers and agents. In the language of Judge Story, "it does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of any of the officers or agents whom it employs, since that would involve it in all its operations in endless embarrassments and difficulties, and losses which would be subversive of the public interests."

Mr. McLANE. I do not feel it necessary to prolong my remarks in reply——

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for allowing me to read the ruling of the Supreme Court on this question.

Mr. McLANE. I have stated explicitly that this is no legal claim against the Government; it is a claim appealing to the grace of Congress. But what is very material to it, so far as the law is concerned, is the point I had just made when interrupted by my friend on the right—that if a public officer who has committed a wrong has acted honestly and honorably, though ignorantly, he ought to be indemnified. That is the opinion of Sir William Scott. Now if the officer ought to be indemnified when he has acted honestly, why should not the Government at once extend its grace to the individual when he has been wronged by the officer? The officer in this particular case is the consul. He has given his bond in order that the Government may find its remedy, and sue on the bond where it chooses to pursue the officer for illegal conduct.

I have not thought it necessary, and do not now, to do more than state clearly to the committee how this claim is made up—what are its items. These are, first, the value of the vessel, $15,000; then there is the difference between the price of the cargo at the place where it was sold and at the place where it was intended to be sold, and there are some other items which belong to the expenses of the ship. The claimant presented a claim of something more than $30,000. Former Congresses when they have passed bills of this character have done what this House has several times done—referred the question to the Department for adjudication. The Committee on Commerce in this case thought it a better principle to deal with the actual facts in the case, and not trust any officer of any Department to settle a question resting upon these great principles of equity and justice. We felt that possibly the Department, instead of paying the man $20,000, might pay him $50,000, or that he might receive less than his due. As we had all the items before us we thought it our duty to take the responsibility of fixing the amount. We have the correspondence of the consul, of the Secretary of State, of the minister to Rio, and of the Secretary of the Treasury. This correspondence shows that after there had been received from the Department here authority to carry the flag the vessel was seized by the consul as having no right to carry the flag. The minister at Rio and Mr. Buchanan, the Secretary of State, washed their hands of such conduct on the part of the consul. The case on that point is very clear. The only question which remains is whether Congress chooses upon such a statement to extend its grace. There is no other claim.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will permit me to ask whether this bill has ever passed the House before?

Mr. McLANE. This bill was originally reported to the House in 1848 by Mr. Grinnell, of Massachusetts, with a favorable report for the full amount of the claim, $30,000. Again, in 1850, it was reported to this House by Mr. Daniel, of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, for the full amount claimed. It was again reported favorably in 1860.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman from Maryland answer me a question?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. I am satisfied that the Government ought to pay this claim if I can only ascertain the amount in which it ought to respond. I understood from the gentleman's remarks that the principal item in the account of damages is the value of the vessel, which is put at the sum of $15,000. I understood from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] that the vessel after being seized was returned to the port of Philadelphia, where the Government refused to receive it; and it then went into the hands of the owners.

Mr. McLANE. The owner protested; but there was a sale made, and the owner got the benefit of the sale.

Mr. CLYMER. What were the proceeds of the sale?

Mr. McLANE. Twenty-five hundred dollars. It must be remembered, Mr. Chairman—I am sure the honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] will remember—that a vessel thus sold in this country, without any right to have American papers, would never sell for anything like her value, whatever her condition might be.

Mr. BROWNE. I am satisfied of that. Was the purchase made by the former owner or on his account?

Mr. McLANE. The purchase was not made by the former owner or on his account.

Mr. BARBER. If the vessel was worth $15,000 to take to Brazil in the first instance, why was she not worth $15,000 to take back there?

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the gentleman from Maryland permit me to ask him a question with the view of drawing out the state of the account between the party and the Government. In making out the account, was credit allowed for the proceeds of the vessel?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRIGHT. And the amount now claimed is the balance?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir. I ought to say—perhaps by way of apology for the committee—that they did not present an itemized account to this House, nor did they in fact actually state such an account. They had before them the account already stated by the claimant, amounting to $33,000, and they went along rejecting certain items of this account and allowing others. Thus they reached the sum of a little over $20,000.

Mr. FIELD. I wish to ask a single question. Why is not this claim brought by the administrator of the estate? It is presented by the widow and children, who plainly have no title except through the personal representatives of Mr. Leef; and his creditors, if there are any, would be excluded.

Mr. McLANE. The claim is brought by the widow and children, because, as happens with so many claims, the claimant himself has died while the claim was pending before Congress.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Maryland have the kindness to tell us when this thing occurred? I think one of the misfortunes of the case for us about here is that the report does not give any dates or facts or items, so that it seems to be utterly impossible to know when the circumstances occurred, what they were, what the size of the claim is, or what the items of damage are. We are buying this pig very much in a poke. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLANE. The report and memorial taken together give all the facts. The inquiry of the gentleman on my right brings to my mind the further fact that when this claim was presented in 1848, I myself was then the representative in this House from the city of Baltimore, of which city this Captain Leef was a citizen, and I presented his original memorial.

Mr. REED. That memorial does not seem to be printed, and we are in the dark to-day just as much as we were before.

Mr. McLANE. I find among these papers his original memorial, with my indorsement, and, although I have no more interest in the case than any other member from my city—indeed, not so much—I am able at least to testify to its antiquity.

Mr. WAIT. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Maryland whether the fact does not appear before the committee that this claim has been presented five different times to Congress and five different times to the Committee on Commerce, and that that committee has reported five times in favor of remunerating this party for the loss sustained by him through the improper conduct of the consul of the United States?

Mr. McLANE. That not only appeared very fully before the committee, but it also appears very fully before this Committee of the Whole, for the facts are as recited in this memorial.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume any further time unless it be in answer to some inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say a word more on this subject. I made these inquiries because there are two gentlemen in the House now who were members of the House when this case was first presented, my friend from Virginia and my friend from Maryland. I thought there were some friends of the bill who had followed it along through all its wanderings for thirty-two or thirty-four years—forty-two or forty-four years, more accurately.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; you are right; thirty-two years, and that is enough.

Mr. CONGER. Thirty-two years, I am told by my friend, is correct; I hoped they would have been able to give some further information in regard to its merits. I have the memorial of the attorney of Mrs. Leef, which seems to have been embodied in the report, unless the report was this memorial which has been read; of that I am not certain. Once or twice in the wanderings of this bill it has come to my notice on that committee. In 1843 [laughter]—no, not in 1843, but in 1873, it came before the Committee on Commerce. [Laughter.] The long life of the claim and its appearance from time to time entirely confuses one a little about dates. [Laughter.] I recollect very well that the Committee on Commerce, to whom it was referred then, did not report favorably on this bill. My recollection is, they reported adversely to it, and that it was then referred to the Committee of Claims. The bill was introduced, I think, by Mr. Roberts, referring it to the Treasury Department.

Mr. McLANE. No, sir; it never went to any other than the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from Michigan is mistaken. I have the original documents.

Mr. REED. There was an adverse report.

Mr. McLANE. Never an adverse report.

Mr. HASKELL. Give it up.

Mr. McLANE. The error consists in this, that Mr. Roberts did make a report, and he made it from the Committee on Commerce in 1878——

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; he made a report, with an accompanying bill, (but from what committee this paper does not state,) that it be sent to the Treasury Department to have the case examined, and if there were any legal claims against the Government to have them audited and allowed. Whether it went to the Treasury Department, whether it was examined, whether it was rejected, or whether the bill itself passed, I do not know. That would have been at least a proper and safe way to dispose of this old, superannuated account and claim. It has outlived most of those who were contemporary with it in its origin in this House. My friend remains here who introduced it, and one who recollects it thirty-two or thirty-three years ago. They have printed matter before them to refresh their memories; but I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, for one, that it looks to me like an old acquaintance. I have examined it, and it seems to me it should not be passed in this form and in this manner by the committee. I think, sir, when property is taken worth $15,000 and sold for $2,500, and the money is paid over to the owner, then we should not be called upon to pay $20,000 for the vessel. It is a new doctrine, too, that we must make good to shippers of flour what they could get by sending it away off to some other port. It is speculative damages.

Mr. REAGAN. It is a wrong impression made on the mind of the gentleman from Michigan that $2,500 were paid to the owner. I remember it sold for that amount, but that but a small portion went to the owner, the balance going to pay the expenses of the suit in court and the expenses of the crew who brought the vessel from South America to this country, taking charge of it. But a small amount was paid to the owner.

Mr. CONGER. It was sold in this country. It was sold with the knowledge, of course, of Mr. Leef. He could have protected himself if he did not. It was not sold abroad. At all events there is so much doubt if anything is justly due to these parties—and I admit here that I am willing to vote for any bill which shall pay what was due at the time——

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Michigan I am sure will let me correct him. The flour was sold at Bahia and the ship was sent back in ballast.

Mr. CONGER. It was sold by the supercargo.

Mr. McLANE. No.

Mr. CONGER. Ah, yes; it was sold by the owner or his agent. It could have been sold in Bahia or in China. He could have shipped it where he chose; but he chose to sell it there, and this Government is not an insurer of flour.

Mr. ACKLEN. That is a small item in the total aggregate amount.

Mr. CONGER. Five thousand dollars?

Mr. ACKLEN. No; $1,100.

Mr. CONGER. Eleven hundred dollars. Then if it is wrong, there is $1,100.

Mr. ACKLEN. Ah, then the total amount of the bill as originally presented was thirty-two thousand some hundred dollars, and the Committee on Commerce have chosen only to allow $30,000. If the gentleman will permit me just one moment——

Mr. CONGER. Not for a speech while I am talking.

Mr. ACKLEN. Then after you are done I wish to say just one word on the subject.

Mr. CONGER. If, then, the owner of this vessel and of this flour thirty-two or thirty-three years ago claimed $12,000 more than this committee find he ought to have claimed, there is some little trace of fraud in that. If it can go to the committee who have reduced it $12,000 with the little attention they have given to it, then with the memory of my friend from Virginia who was perhaps originally acquainted with the facts, and the gentleman from Maryland, who first introduced the claim—with a little jogging of their memory perhaps they will remember what is about right—if it can be recommitted I say to them the probability is it will be reduced $12,000 more. I am not so particular about that myself, but I do not see in his seat that distinguished economist, my friend, Mr. WRIGHT, from Pennsylvania, or else I would be sure he would move this be referred back to the committee that they might make a reasonable and honorable effort to reduce it $12,000 more. But at any rate let it go back to the committee, and let them tell this House just exactly what in law and what in equity are the items for which this Government ought to pay in this case and then I will be satisfied.

Mr. ACKLEN. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I desire only to say to this committee that when this bill was reported to this House by the gentleman from Virginia I reserved the right to make a minority report. After a more careful consideration of the case, reading every paper in connection with it, I satisfied myself fully and thoroughly that the allowance of $20,000 to the widow and heirs of Henry Leef in this case was little enough for the hardships which he had been forced to endure. This vessel was seized in Bahia without authority of law. The actions of the consul there, Mr. Tyler, were disapproved by the minister at Rio and disallowed by the State Department at Washington. Under the circumstances there remained no other course for this claimant to take than the one he has adopted. Now, it will poorly comport with the honor of this Government and the spirit of our institutions to refuse to allow this claim.

The question recurred on laying the bill aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 74, noes 46.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLS reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar generally, and particularly a bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BEALE. I demand the previous question on the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is voted down the gentleman's amendment will be in order.

Mr. CONGER. I addressed the Chair first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that fact, but he is compelled to recognize the gentleman from Virginia in charge of the bill, as he was sustained in committee by the bill being reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 87, noes 60.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered, which was on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays on the engrossment and third reading.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 36 members voting therefor, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 76, not voting 90; as follows:

GEORGE F. SWANN.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2808) to pay George F. Swann, administrator of George T. Swann, for proceeds of cotton seized by the military forces of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY COMMISSION.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time and to have printed in the RECORD the address and resolutions of the Mississippi Valley States commission.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. These resolutions relate to a very important subject. They are the report of the delegates appointed by the governors in session a few days ago at Louisville. The document will only make about a column of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is this a body authorized by law?

Mr. WILLIS. No, sir. This is not the commission appointed by law. It is a commission appointed by the governors of the States.

Mr. CONGER. To what subject does the address relate?

Mr. WILLIS. The improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the address and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Mississippi Levees, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. They are as follows:

To the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: The following resolution was passed by the convention for the promotion of American commerce and industry which met in New Orleans, Louisiana, December 3, 1878:

"Whereas, in view of the magnitude of the interests involved in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries, so as to furnish commercial communication between all their parts, and with foreign nations, and to protect the inhabitants on its banks from overflow, to the extent of their practical improvement and the wants of the population upon their borders now and in time to come; and

"Whereas the vast interests that may be thus subserved have not been advanced according to their just requirements nor in any degree comparable to the improvement of other commercial avenues of no greater national importance by the Federal Government, which alone has the jurisdiction and power to accomplish the same: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That this convention recommend to the governors of the respective States bordering upon said river and its navigable tributaries to appoint three commissioners each to represent their respective States in a board of commissioners which shall be permanent and continued so long as there is necessity for the same. This board of commissioners shall inquire into all matters appertaining to the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and of the improvement of their banks so as to prevent overflow, and of the commerce of the valley of the Mississippi. And it shall be the duty of said commission to disseminate from time to time, through the press or by address to the public, or in any suitable mode, such intelligence among the people so vitally interested as to it may seem desirable upon the subject of the improvements herein proposed. And it shall be the further duty of said commission to gather, collate, and embody such information and facts as to it may seem appropriate and communicate the same to the Congress of the United States, by way of memorial or otherwise, for the purpose of inducing that body to make appropriations for the improvements herein proposed.

"Be it further resolved, That, in order to give force and effect to the recommendations made in the first resolution, we request the president of this convention to appoint Mr. Eugene Underwood, of Louisville, Kentucky, a committee of one to address the governors of the States bordering on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and urge them to comply with the recommendations made in the said first resolution."

The governors of the several States of the Mississippi Valley, in accordance with the above resolution, having appointed commissioners, the same assembled in Louisville, Kentucky, December 2, 1879.

We desire to express our gratification that your honorable bodies have already taken action in the appointment of an engineering commission to survey and report upon a system for the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries. But while we have every confidence that said board will make an exhaustive report, the length of the time which must necessarily elapse before action can be taken thereon, and the pressing necessities for speedy relief to the commerce of the valley, impel us to urge upon you the importance of immediate action in making ample appropriations for the removal of such obstructions in our navigable waters as are without question working serious damage to navigation. We refer especially to obstructions by snags, sunken wrecks, &c., and recommend a large and speedy appropriation for their removal by snag-boats. We would also suggest that a great obstruction exists, especially this year, by bars formed in the river by sand, &c., possibly caused by the wide expanse of rivers and consequent shoaling. To remedy this speedily and effectually, we respectfully recommend the employment of sufficient dredge-boats of approved construction.

We also respectfully recommend that Congress pass, at as early a day as possible, a general law providing for the removal of all sunken boats or vessels, constituting, as they do, one of the greatest hazards to the navigation of our waters. We further recommend that the law provide for a notice to the owners of such sunken vessels that after sixty days, should they fail to remove their sunken or wrecked vessels, they shall be forfeited to the United States Government, which shall take charge of and remove them at the earliest possible time. And we would suggest further that after the sinking of such boat it shall be the duty of the United States officers in charge of the lights in that portion of the river to cause a light and buoy to be placed over such wreck until removed.

We further recommend that for the various public works in connection with our rivers remaining unfinished at the present time, and for the further prosecution of which no adequate appropriation has been made, we urge the propriety of appropriations for their speedy completion and protection from destruction by ice and sudden floods.

Further, we beg to call special attention to the unfinished work on Davis Island dam, near Pittsburgh, in the Ohio River. It is a work of national importance and no delay should be permitted, but liberal appropriations furnished to secure its early completion.

The United States Government has completed a lock and dam on the Monongahela River, near Morgantown, in West Virginia. As a river improvement it is unrivaled for solidity and admirable quality of workmanship; but until the Government constructs another lock and dam to connect with the slack-water navigation already in use to the city of Pittsburgh this model improvement will remain useless. We therefore urge that immediate provision be made for the construction of a lock or dam which will be the closing link in securing free navigation of this river into the heart of a rich agricultural and mineral region in West Virginia.

We fully indorse the action of the Government in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi and its navigable tributaries by the removal of obstructions, straightening the channel, and the rebuilding of the old and building of the new wing-dams, as is now to be done, under the efficient management of the Government engineers in charge, as the only way to give immediate relief to the commerce of the river.

That we, as practical men, familiar with the navigation of the Mississippi and tributaries, approve of the system of lights placed along the banks, as being a great benefit, and recommend that the number be increased especially on the Mississippi, until a light has been placed in every deep bend along its banks.

That we further suggest for the consideration of Congress that, for many years past, the engineers of the United States, commencing with Brigadier-General G. K. Warren, major of engineers, have made exhaustive reports of the cost and utility of a reservoir system of the northwestern lakes on the head-waters of the Mississippi River, for the purpose of holding in reserve the accumulations of winter and spring floods, to be used during the season of low-water, the cost of which, according to the well-considered estimates of the engineers, is as nothing compared with the benefits to be derived therefrom. We therefore earnestly request that you will at as early a day as possible make the appropriations required for the consummation of this most desirable system of improvements.

That the works so far prosecuted upon the Upper Missouri, the Upper Yellowstone, and upon the Red River of the North have resulted in great good, and the early completion of these works, as recommended by the United States engineers, is urgently needed.

We therefore ask of Congress such appropriations as may be necessary for these works.

Finally, the work of removing obstructions in the Ohio River at the falls near Louisville is entitled to prompt attention.

Private enterprise among steamboat men has done much, and is still working to secure a channel of comparative safety over these celebrated rapids, but a work of its magnitude can only be successfully carried out by the Government where generosity and ability are alone equal to the task.

To sum all up briefly, the works to which we have called your attention are such that, if successfully finished, will enhance the great carrying interests of our country, add more to its general prosperity than any other, will unite the people of this great valley more closely than ever, and elevate and dignify the commerce of our nation. And we beg that your honorable bodies will give the subject that immediate attention it deserves.

Signed on behalf of the Mississippi Valley commission, at Louisville, December 3, 1879.

EUGENE UNDERWOOD,
President.

PLATT B. WALKER, Secretary.

After passing the above report the following resolution, offered by Hon. John Hogan, of Missouri, was passed by the commission:

"Whereas one of our old citizens of the valley of the Upper Mississippi, Captain H. M. Shreve, invented the principle upon which the United States snag-boats have been constructed, and the United States have used said invention without any remuneration to him or his heirs, and knowing that in past times several committees of Congress have recommended that some suitable provision be made, and that so far no definite action has been taken, therefore we respectfully request that Congress, in conformity to various petitions, do act in this behalf, and, though late, remunerate the heirs for the labors of their ancestor."

The following resolution was then offered by Mr. Crooks, and passed:

"Resolved, That the president of this commission be requested to send to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress copies of the address and resolutions, that they may be laid before their respective bodies that proper action may be had."

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with section 4690 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the report of Carlisle P. He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in accordance with the requirements of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870, entitled "An act to provide for inventories and accounts of property of the United States in the public buildings and grounds belonging to the United States in the District of Columbia," a full and complete inventory of all property belonging to the United States in buildings, rooms, offices, and grounds occupied by the Department of the Interior and under its charge; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a letter from the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, recommending that certain deficiencies in the appropriations for that Department be supplied; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER. I present the petition of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry of the United States, praying for an amendment of the patent laws. As this petition is very short I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be reported at length if there be no objection.

The petition was read and referred to the Committee on Patents, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Existing patent laws do not secure to authors and inventors the exclusive rights guaranteed them by the Constitution. They do not protect from prosecution as infringers innocent purchasers of patented articles sold in the open market, nor do they protect the citizen in the private use of his own invention if an identical invention has been previously patented by another.

Therefore we, the members of the National Grange, representing thirty-two States of this Union, in annual session assembled at Canandaigua, New York, do most respectfully petition your honorable bodies so to amend the patent laws of America as to make the manufacturer or vendor alone responsible for infringement in the sale of patented articles.

And further, so to amend them as to protect from prosecution or penalty parties manufacturing for their own use any article previously patented, provided the parties in such case were not cognizant of the existence of such letters-patent.

And your petitioners would ever pray, &c.

Done by order of and under the seal of the National Grange of the Order of the Patrons of Husbandry of the United States of America.

HENLEY JAMES, Indiana,
WILLIAM G. WAYNE, New York,
D. WYATT AIKEN, South Carolina,
Executive Committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I believe in the sacred right of petition. I believe that this right belongs to all races and conditions of men, and to every form of government. It is the birthright of the poor and lowly as well as of the rich and the exalted. Its exercise is as well secured by the Constitution of the United States to the defenders of the Union as to the associated bankers; to those who fought the battles of the country as to those who speculated at home; to the soldiers who offered their lives for the Government as to the syndicates who have trafficked in its bonds. I therefore present the petition of seven thousand soldiers who served in the Union armies during the war of the rebellion, and in honor of their services and in recognition of their rights as citizens I ask that it may be read. They reside in the States of Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Missouri, New York, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Arkansas, Michigan, New Jersey, Nebraska, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Wisconsin, and West Virginia. I ask that their petition be read.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table, and was read, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned petitioners, having served faithfully the Government of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, as will be seen by our records in the War and Navy Departments, ask to lay before your honorable body a statement of our grievances, and to petition for relief.

1st. We would remind your honorable body that we were paid in a depreciated currency, worth during the greater part of our term of service from forty to seventy cents on the dollar in coin.

2d. The Government has since declared that the payment of the bondholders in the same money that the soldiers were paid in would be dishonesty and repudiation.

3d. We do not believe that the bondholders have a claim either in law or equity better than the men who offered their lives that the nation might live.

Therefore, we believe that the Government is honestly and justly indebted to the soldiers for the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment, with 6 per cent. interest, compounded semi-annually, and that Congress should provide for the payment of such sums as may be found due to each soldier, sailor, or marine, or their lawful heirs, with interest as above, in full legal-tender greenbacks.

Therefore we, the undersigned soldiers and sailors, do respectfully petition your honorable body to pass a law covering the above points at once, and thus give immediate and direct relief to one million of the defenders of our Government in its hour of trial and danger, and indirectly to forty millions of American citizens by reason of the impetus given to all industrial pursuits. For this act of justice and relief to all the people we shall ever pray.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented the petition of A. Johnson, attorney, representing three companies of the East Tennessee National Home Guards, United States volunteers, called into service in the year 1863, praying compensation for services rendered the Government of the United States during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of Lucy E. Mayhugh, widow of William Mayhugh, a teamster in the service of the United States in the late war, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John Eubank and others, citizens of Adair County, Kentucky, praying for the passage of a law granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Horace S. Spear, Company I, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE TREASURY NOTES.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment, intended to be proposed to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States Treasury notes:

In the third line strike out the words, "passage of this resolution," and in lieu thereof insert, "1st day of January, A. D. 1885;" and on the sixth and seventh lines strike out the word "hereafter" and insert in lieu thereof "thereafter;" so as to read:

That from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1885, the Treasury notes of the United States shall be receivable for all dues to the United States excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender; and any of said notes thereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

NEGRO EMIGRATION TO NORTHERN STATES.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Whereas large numbers of negroes from the Southern States, and especially from the State of North Carolina, are emigrating to the Northern States, and especially to the State of Indiana; and

Whereas it is currently alleged that they are induced to do so by the unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens toward them in the South: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members of this body be appointed by its presiding officer, whose duty it shall be to investigate the causes which have led to the aforesaid emigration, and to report the same to the Senate; and the said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, compel the attendance of witnesses, and to sit at any time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see that in print.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to ask to hear it read once more.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

Mr. CONKLING. Has it been objected to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Vermont to object.

Mr. CONKLING. I was not aware of that. I rose only to ask to have it read again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will be printed, I suppose, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be entered.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the clerk of the Select Committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the Introduction and Spread of Epidemic Diseases be paid by the Secretary of the Senate out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate from and after the 1st day of January, 1880.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, under the rule it will be read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of that matter, whether (which I suppose to be the fact) this gentleman, the clerk, was authorized to be appointed by the resolution creating the committee?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY PAGE.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 325) for the relief of Henry Page. It will take but a few moments.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that on Thursday last I believe it was understood that a pension bill, which was then under consideration and informally laid aside at the request of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] should be taken up this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the understanding.

Mr. WITHERS. In the absence of the Senator from Missouri, however, who takes an interest in the case, I am willing that the bill of the Senator from Arkansas should be considered, with the understanding that the other bill shall be taken up when that is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will lie over without prejudice. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to consider the bill indicated by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Henry Page, late agent and disbursing officer of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, with the sum of $904.09, being the amount, with interest, disbursed by him as such officer in good faith to persons falsely producing the discharges of, and identifying themselves as, John West, Alfred Rogers, and Miles Shinn, discharged United States soldiers; and that the proper certificate of credit be issued to said Page, and be received by the United States marshal for the eastern district of Arkansas, in full satisfaction of the judgments against said Page, on account of the aforesaid disbursements, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas.

Mr. GARLAND. There is a printed report, which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is reported by the Committee on Finance, and the Senator from Arkansas asks that the Senate consider it at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether this is a case that was once before the Committee on Claims and decided adversely? There was some such case that was mentioned to me. I merely ask for information.

Mr. GARLAND. This was never before any other committee than the Committee on Finance, and they have twice made a unanimous report in favor of the claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not the matter, then, to which my attention was called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BAYARD from the Committee on Finance, February 11, 1879:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Page, late disbursing agent of the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands in the State of Arkansas, submit the following report:

By the certified copy of the record of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas, it appears that a special verdict was found in favor of the United States against the said Henry Page and his sureties, to the effect that the said Page, as special agent and disbursing officer, received from the United States the sum of $287.50 on the 23d of June, 1868, with instructions to pay the same to Miles Shinn, a discharged soldier of Company G, One hundred and thirteenth United States Colored Troops, and that on the 13th day of July, 1868, the said defendant in good faith paid the same to a person claiming to be Miles Shinn, and who presented the discharge of and was identified as Miles Shinn by J. T. Daniels, but that the person to whom the said sum of money was paid by defendant was not Miles Shinn, and that the said Miles Shinn has never been paid the said sum of money by the defendant.

"If upon these facts the court is of opinion that the defendant is liable, then we find for the United States, the plaintiff, the sum of two hundred and eighty-seven dollars and fifty cents ($287.50), with 6 per cent. interest from the 13th of July, 1868; but if the court is of the opinion that defendant is not liable, then we find for the defendant."

And in another suit of the United States against the said Henry Page, a similar special verdict for the sum of $130.32 was found against the defendant, subject to the opinion of the court. And also in the case of John West.

Upon the question of the liability of the defendant thus reserved, Judges Dillon and Caldwell divided in opinion, and filed a certificate of division of opinion, so that the case should be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States; but it appears that the petitioner was wholly unable for want of means to carry this case, involving a sum less than $1,000, to the Supreme Court of the United States, by reason of the expense.

It appears by the certificate of Charles C. Waters, United States attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas, whose statements are indorsed by Henry C. Caldwell, the district judge before whom the suits against Page by the United States were tried, that Page had been engaged for a considerable time as disbursing officer, and large sums of public money, amounting in the aggregate to several millions of dollars, had passed through his hands and been faithfully accounted for; and that the payments to the persons falsely personating the three discharged soldiers in question were made by him in perfect good faith, and by the absolute perjury of apparently credible witnesses, and that Page was the victim of a conspiracy which it is difficult to see how he could have avoided.

In view, therefore, of the circumstances of the case, the special verdicts of the juries, and certificate of the district attorney who prosecuted and the district judge before whom the cases were tried, all expressly exonerating Mr. Page from any bad faith in these transactions, and attesting his long and faithful performance of duty in receiving and disbursing millions of the public money, we consider his case meritorious, and that his prayer for relief should be granted, and accompany this report with a bill for his relief.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, to those Senators who have heard the report read, it is unnecessary for me to add anything so far as the merits of the case are concerned; but I wish to state, as a reason for asking early action upon this case in which there have been two unanimous reports already, that Mr. Page since this occurrence has been appointed an agent to the Indian tribes in Colorado, and he has been an acceptable officer in every respect. As the law now stands, in adjusting his accounts with the Department, he being found in arrears to another Department upon that verdict, the Interior Department would have the right to withhold from his compensation so much as is necessary to cover that amount. So that he may not be embarrassed in the settlement of his accounts with the Interior Department, I ask the Senate to pass this bill, which has now been recommended twice by a unanimous vote of the Finance Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of this bill, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent to take up and put on its passage the bill (S. No. 744) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks the Senate to consider at this time the bill he has named.

Mr. CONKLING. What is that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the one hundred and third of the Rules and Articles of War be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

ARTICLE 103. No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for any offense committed more than two years, or in case of desertion more than three years, before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he may meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator from Texas would, as he is about to do, tell us what this is, subject to objection. It is new to me. I should like to reserve my right to object.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the bill proposes to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War. As that now stands, it is construed by the military authorities as not applying to cases of desertion. The Attorneys-General, whenever the question has been submitted to them, have invariably decided that it does so apply. The Judge-Advocate-General gives the same opinion. There is a direct conflict between the military authorities and the legal authorities on that question. The purpose and design of this bill is to place the limitation upon prosecutions for desertion the same as upon those for other offenses; and I will state to the Senator from New York that there is a full report accompanying the bill, which I will ask to have read.

Mr. CONKLING. Has the Senator the section of the statutes before him?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Will he be kind enough to read that?

Mr. MAXEY. The section is in the report in full. The statute as it now stands reads as follows:

ART. 103. No person shall be liable to be tried and punished by a general court-martial for any offense which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial, unless by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment, he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period.—Revised Statutes, page 239.

The whole thing turns upon the expression "unless by reason of having absented himself," the law officers deciding that that absenting himself must have been beyond the jurisdiction of the courts, while the military authorities construe it to mean absenting himself from his duty without leave; and it is upon that point that this conflict has arisen which has produced great hardship in the Army.

The bill has been twice unanimously reported from the Military Committee, and it was sent to the House and was reported favorably at the last session by the House committee, but was lost in the House for want of time to take it up. That is the history of it. The report is very full, and I think will be satisfactory to the Senator from New York, if read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY on the 9th instant:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 744) to amend the one hundred and third Article of War, respectfully submit the following report:

The one hundred and third Article of War reads as follows:

"ART. 103. No person shall be liable to be tried and punished by a general court-martial for any offense which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial, unless by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment, he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period."—Revised Statutes, page 239.

Does the limitation in article 103 apply to cases of desertion? What is the correct construction of the expression "unless by reason of having absented himself?"

Judge-Advocate-General Holt, "in construing this article, held, in repeated cases, that there was nothing in the article to except desertion from the operation of the limitation, but that the same was included, equally with all other military crimes, within the provision. He held that the word 'absence' was employed in the same sense as in some of the State statutes of limitation, and meant here absence from the jurisdiction of the United States, and he was of opinion that, unless the order for the court was issued within two years after the date of the desertion, the prosecution of the same was barred by the article." (See Annual Report of Judge-Advocate General Dunn for 1877, October 10, 1877, page 3.)

The case of C. K. Thompson was submitted by the Secretary of War June 13, 1871, for the opinion of the Attorney-General, and on the 23d of June, 1871, Hon. B. H. Bristow, Solicitor-General and acting Attorney-General, gave his opinion, which may be found in volume XIII, Opinions of Attorneys-General, page 462. The substance of that opinion and the facts on which it is based may be briefed as follows:

Thompson was enlisted August 21, 1865, for three years; deserted October 2, 1865; was apprehended April 13, 1871, and was confined in Newport Barracks to await trial by general court-martial: Advised, That the court-martial has no jurisdiction to try the case, because of the bar presented by the eighty-eighth Article of War. An examination of the eighty-eighth Article of War (2 Statutes at Large page 369; also in Revised Army Regulations 1861, page 513) will show that article 88, upon which the above opinion is based, is in substance and essence the same as article 103 of the present Articles of War. And the Attorney-General refers for support to 1 Opinions, page 383, and 6 Opinions, page 240.

The case of Samuel J. Harris, who enlisted in the Ninth Infantry on the 16th day of August, 1870, and deserted on the 19th day of September, 1870, and who enlisted under an alias about one year thereafter in the Sixth Infantry, and about 26th October, 1872, confessed to an officer of that regiment that he was a deserter from the Ninth Infantry, is in point. March 11, 1873, an order was issued for convening a general court-martial for his trial, and on the 24th April following the trial was proceeded with, and he was found guilty. The opinion of the Attorney-General was called for by the Secretary of War, and may be found in volume XIV, Opinions, page 265. In that opinion the Attorney-General, treating of the words, "by reason of having absented himself," says:

"I am inclined to think that it would be fair to hold that the absence contemplated by the article is an absence from the reach or jurisdiction of the military authorities. To avoid the limitation of the article it would seem to be necessary that the accused should not only be absent, but that he should be where the military authorities, by reasonable diligence, could not make him amenable to justice."

And in the same opinion he says:

"Statutes of limitation in criminal matters apply to all cases not expressly excepted from their operation."

Judge-Advocate-General Dunn concurs in the views expressed by the Attorney-General, and by his predecessor, Judge Holt, as hereinbefore quoted. And the committee is advised that in an opinion given by Attorney-General Devens, September 1 last, the doctrine is held that the limitation of two years, as now contained in article 103, applies to desertion. But the committee is advised that these opinions did not and do not find full favor with all the military authorities, and in consideration of this difference of opinion it is deemed advisable by the committee to so frame this important article as to leave its meaning beyond reasonable question.

On this subject the Secretary of War says, in his annual report on the operations of the Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, on page 21:

"The Judge-Advocate-General earnestly recommends additional legislation which shall fix beyond question a specific period of limitation to prosecution in cases of desertion. The one hundred and third Article of War, fixing the limit of time within which a person shall be liable to be tried and punished by a general court-martial, is construed by the Attorney-General, as well as the Judge-Advocate-General, to include the crime of desertion, while the contrary has been held by some military authorities. * * * As there has been much controversy over this question, it is recommended that it be finally set at rest by precise legislation."

This recommendation, in the opinion of the committee, is wise.

The bill under consideration meets, as the committee believe, the question, and leaves no reasonable ground for dispute as to its construction. The committee fix the limit of three years to prosecution for desertion, leaving the prosecution of all other offenses as now fixed in article 103. It is believed wise to harmonize the laws regulating prosecution for military offenses, as near as may be, with the laws regulating prosecution of criminal offenses before courts of ordinary criminal jurisdiction. The following sections of the Revised Statutes are in point:

"SEC. 1043. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for treason or other capital offense, willful murder excepted, unless the indictment is found within three years next after such treason or capital offense is done or committed."—Revised Statutes, page 103.

Section 1044 puts the limitation for offenses, not capital, at two years. Section 1045 withholds the benefit of these statutes from persons fleeing from justice. And this extraordinary result follows, as set forth in the following extract:

"So, at military law, mutiny, disobedience of orders, and the offering of violence to an officer, which are to be deemed graver offenses than desertion, because at all times punishable with death, while desertion is so punishable in war only, as also cowardice in battle, and various other offenses incident to war, which, being capital, are at least equally grave with desertion, are also all included within the statute of limitation contained in the article under consideration.

"That desertion, an offense unaccompanied by violence, and obviously not the most heinous or most unpardonable that a soldier may be guilty of, should alone, of all military offenses, be excepted from the statutes, would certainly seem to be most unconscionable."—Judge-Advocate-General's Report of October 10, 1877, page 5.

In addition to the foregoing report of the Judge-Advocate-General, the committee invite attention of the Senate to his report accompanying that of the Secretary of War at the present session on the same subject. The reasons of the Judge-Advocate-General in favor of the amendment appear to be conclusive.

The committee believe the limitation fixed in the accompanying bill reasonable, and that it removes all doubt as to the construction of article 103, and the committee report the same back to the Senate, without amendment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator from Texas would kindly consent to allow this bill to go over until to-morrow, in order that it may be thought about a little further. I perceive that in the amended article the old words, "or of some other manifest impediment," meaning thereby impediment to bringing the person to trial, are left out; and the consequence, if we pass it in this form, as it strikes me at first blush, will be this: Take the case of an officer, for instance, who has made false accounts, and the fact has been concealed or not discovered until the two years are up, and he has gone on in the administration of his affairs, he is not only not punished in that case because the two years have run, although nobody knew anything of the crime, but he is still left in the Army. It differs, therefore, from the case of an ordinary crime by a citizen upon which the statute of limitations has run; he is merely left as a citizen without any further responsibility about that crime, but in this case the officer would be left in the Army administering public trusts, with no earthly way to get rid of him.

That is the way it strikes me at first. It may be that there are other difficulties to consider in connection with those words, which will be an answer to what I have suggested; and therefore, if the honorable Senator will be kind enough to allow the bill to go over until to-morrow, I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not understand precisely the case which was put by the Senator from Vermont. Was it the case of an officer who has defaulted?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. MAXEY. These statutes would not prevent recovery for a defalcation. I do not think that objection applies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly one reason why I should like to have the bill go over until we can consider whether it does, because I am sure the Senator would agree with me that it should not be the spirit or object of this provision to allow such a thing.

Mr. MAXEY. I am perfectly willing to accommodate the Senator from Vermont. The Senator will see, by turning over to the statute applying to persons in ordinary life, that rape, robbery, arson, the highest crimes known to the law—treason itself, all have a limitation on their prosecution; and I believe none higher than five years. I cannot see that this is worse than those. The only object I had in view was to place the offense of desertion on the equitable plane of those like instances in civil life. But if the Senator desires to have the bill lie over, be it so; I want it investigated fully. If it is not right it ought not to pass. Believing it to be perfectly right, I see no reason why it should not proceed; but I am willing to let it go over to be taken up in the morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over.

SAN ANTONIO ARSENAL.

Mr. MAXEY. I now ask that Senate bill No. 54 be taken up, and I will say that it was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs favorably at the last session and went over for want of time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 54) to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land to enlarge and protect the San Antonio arsenal. It proposes to appropriate $14,000 to enable the Secretary of War to purchase, inclose, and improve the following described piece of land adjoining the United States arsenal grounds at San Antonio, Texas, namely: All that tract of ground bounded by Arsenal street, Lower Flores street, the United States arsenal, and the San Antonio River, with a frontage on Arsenal street of thirteen hundred and fifty feet, more or less, and on Lower Flores street of one hundred and twenty-five feet, more or less, and containing about three and one-half acres. No part of the money appropriated is to be expended until the requirements of section 355 of the Revised Statutes have been complied with.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill has been twice favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I have myself in person examined that ground. The storehouses of the arsenal are right along the line of the ground proposed to be bought. It will secure them against fire, because if not purchased by the Government others can purchase it and put up structures thereon. We had the testimony of the ordnance officers who have charge, and all agree in the propriety of it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

SEC. 2. Before the name of any person shall be placed on the pension-roll under this act, the applicant must file an application for pension under oath, made before the clerk of a court having a seal, setting forth in said application the name of the company and regiment in which the applicant served; that he was honorably discharged from the service of the United States, and that during the time he was in said service in line of duty he was wounded, injured, or contracted disease, which has entirely or partially disabled him from supporting himself, or himself and family, by manual labor; and that he is in necessitous circumstances; and shall prove by the affidavits of two disinterested and credible witnesses, who reside in the same election district with the applicant, taken under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, that they believe the statement made by the applicant of his service and honorable discharge from the Army or Navy of the United States, and of the wounds, injuries, or disease contracted while in the said service in line of duty to be true; and that they know of their own personal knowledge that the applicant has suffered from said wounds, injury, or disease since his discharge from the Army or Navy; and that the applicant is in necessitous circumstances. The application of the surviving widow shall set forth the service and honorable discharge of her husband; that the cause of his death was wounds, injuries, or disease contracted while in the service of the United States in line of duty, the date of her marriage and the death of her husband; and that she is in necessitous circumstances; and her statement must be supported by affidavits in same manner as the application of a soldier. The application of a father or mother must set forth the service, and the death, or honorable discharge of the son; to what extent they or either of them were dependent on the son for support before he went into the service and up to the time of his death; that he died in the service, or was wounded, injured, or contracted disease while in the line of duty which was the cause of his death; the celibacy of the son, and that the applicant is in necessitous circumstances; and support the application by affidavits in same manner as the application of a soldier. An honorable discharge shall be satisfactory evidence of the soldier's service in the Army or Navy, and its loss shall not deprive any person of the benefit of this act; but other evidence of an honorable discharge may be deemed sufficient.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not apply to any person who is receiving a pension at the rate of $8 or more per month, nor to any person receiving a pension of less than $8 per month, except for the difference now received and the pension allowed by this act. All pensions under this act shall be paid from and after the passage thereof, for and during the natural lives of the persons entitled thereto.

SEC. 4. Any person who has now filed or hereafter may file an application for pension under the general pension laws heretofore approved, may at any time withdraw said application and file an application under the provisions of this act. And this act shall not be construed to interfere in any way with pension applications now on file or hereafter to be filed under the pension laws now in force.

SEC. 5. Any person who shall falsely and corruptly take any oath required under this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years, and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him is reversed; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stricken from the pension-roll the name of any person whenever it shall be made to appear by proof satisfactory to him that such name was put upon such roll through false and fraudulent representations, and that such person is not entitled to a pension under this act: Provided, Before any action is taken by the Secretary of the Interior to strike off the name of any person on the pension-roll, notice shall be given to the pensioner and an opportunity be afforded to him to defend his right to the pension granted in pursuance of this act.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of sections 4745, 4746, 4747, 4748, and 4766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby made a part of this act so far as the same are applicable, and no law or laws now in force which in any way conflict with the provisions of this act shall be applicable to the persons above named, or be so construed as to deprive them of the benefits of this act.

Mr. BELFORD. I understood that the call of all the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions was to be completed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I did not know that, and I will withdraw the joint resolution.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON. The business before the House to-day for the District of Columbia is House bill No. 2328, which was under consideration at the adjournment on the last District day. The House, as in Committee of the Whole, was proceeding to consider that bill providing for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes. They had proceeded as far as the sixth section of the bill, and were considering an amendment moved by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD.]

The SPEAKER. That is a correct statement, as appears from the Journal. The Clerk will first read the sixth section, and then read the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD.]

The sixth section was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to demand of the sinking-fund commissioner of the District of Columbia so many of the 3.65 bonds authorized by act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, and acts amendatory thereto, as may be necessary for the payment of the judgments; and said sinking-fund commissioner is hereby directed to issue and deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of 3.65 bonds required to satisfy the judgments; which bonds shall be received by said claimants at par in payment of such judgments, and shall bear date January 1, 1879, and mature at the same time as other bonds of this issue; and for the amount found by the court to be due on any such claim interest shall be allowed from maturity of the same at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum; and the gross amount of such bonds heretofore and hereafter issued shall not exceed, in the aggregate, $5,000,000.

Mr. SAMFORD'S amendment was read, as follows:

Add to section 6 the following:

Provided, That the Government of the United States is in no event liable for the payment of the principal or interest of any bonds authorized to be issued under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to state my objections to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. The sixth section provides that when the Court of Claims has passed upon these claims against the District of Columbia they shall be paid in the 3.65 bonds which were authorized by an act passed in 1874, and the amendment of my friend from Alabama provides that in no event shall the Government of the United States be liable for principal or interest of the bonds to pay the claims provided for in this bill. If that amendment of the gentleman from Alabama prevails, then it puts upon a different footing that class of creditors of the District of Columbia who were not paid by the board of audit from those who were so paid.

The history of the necessity for this legislation is to this effect: In 1874 Congress passed a law establishing a board of audit, and that board of audit was to pass upon all the claims against the old government of the District of Columbia which had just gone out by the passage of that act, and whatever claim so found by the board of audit to be just and proper was to be paid for in 3.65 bonds. In that act this provision was found:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriation as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied on the property within the said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

That bill, under which $15,000,000 of 3.65 bonds were issued and are now outstanding against the District government—under that bill the Government of the United States pledged its faith that it would see the proper taxes were levied, not only to pay the interest, but to create a sinking fund to pay the principal at maturity, which was fifty years from the date of the bond. If the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama prevails, which says the Government of the United States is in no sense, in no event, to be liable for either principal or interest, then it puts this class of creditors against the District of Columbia on a worse footing than those who got their claims through the board of audit.

The class of claims to be considered under this bill did not pass the board of audit, because by the act of 1876, I believe it was, Congress, having become alarmed lest the board of audit should pass fraudulent claims against the District of Columbia, dissolved the board of audit; and it left unaudited, unsettled by that board, a large class of claims against the District of Columbia, amounting to one million and some odd thousand dollars.

Those claims still outstanding against the District of Columbia are many of them supposed to be as honest as those that have already been paid; and the object of this bill is to place them upon the same footing—those that are honest and correct as those that have already been audited and paid by the board of audit under the bill of 1874. And I think, sir, that if Congress determines that these bills shall be paid, they ought to be paid in as good currency or in as good bonds as the other class of claims that went through the board of audit before it was dissolved by an act of Congress. For this reason, and to put these claims upon the same footing as the others, I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama ought to prevail.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. How has the amount of these claims to be covered by this bill been ascertained?

Mr. HUNTON. We ascertain it by the report of the commissioners. I have the statement before me, and the amount, it will be recollected, is limited in the bill, the whole amount of the bonds that have been issued and can be issued under this bill, to $15,000,000. But the exact amount is $1,035,242.03, according to the report of the commission.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. With very great pleasure.

Mr. McMILLIN. Were not these debts originally owed by the District?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will not this act, if the amendment is not adopted, make them the debt of the people of the United States?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, then, if the bill will not have that effect, why not put the clause in which makes the thing certain?

Mr. HUNTON. The effect of the bill without the amendment will be to impose upon the Government of the United States the obligation to see that taxes are levied and money collected from the District of Columbia to pay the annual interest and to provide a sinking fund to pay the principal at maturity.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is there not some question in the minds of members of Congress generally as to whether or not the United States is bound for the principal of those bonds that have already been issued?

Mr. HUNTON. That is all the obligation on the part of the Government we can find, to see that this tax is levied and the money collected to pay the principal and interest.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question.

Mr. HUNTON. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WARNER. When was this indebtedness incurred? In what year?

Mr. HUNTON. It was incurred under the old board of public works in 1871, 1872, and 1873, when they had a legislature in the District of Columbia and a board of public works.

Mr. WARNER. Have these claims ever been rejected by any board authorized to examine and act upon them?

Mr. HUNTON. Those that are under consideration here have never been presented to any board as far as I know; and there will be a provision that where the board of audit has passed upon a claim adversely that will be excluded from the Court of Claims.

Mr. WARNER. Then I understand these claims have never been presented for payment?

Mr. HUNTON. Never been audited.

Mr. WARNER. Were they regularly presented?

Mr. HUNTON. Most of them were; a few were not.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia a further question with his permission, my desire being to get at the facts. Is not the Government, under existing law, liable for one-half of the interest on these bonds?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, does not this fix the payment of the interest of the debt of the District of Columbia on the people of the United States?

Mr. HUNTON. Only one-half of it. The United States Government is liable for one-half of the annual expenses under the organic law passed in 1877 fixing a permanent government for the District of Columbia; and that act provides that the Government of the United States shall annually pay the interest on these 3.65 bonds, and be allowed for it in the computation between the United States and the District of Columbia under that organic act.

Mr. REAGAN. I would ask my friend from Virginia if that act goes beyond making the United States Government liable for the expenses of the city government, whether it makes it liable for the debt of the District?

Mr. HUNTON. It makes the United States Government liable for nothing in regard to the three-sixty-fives debt for which it was not liable under the act of 1874, to which I have referred.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that by all manner of means the amendment that is now pending should be adopted, and I will state very briefly my reasons for thinking so. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] says that the reason why he does not want the amendment adopted is that the bill as it is now framed obligates the United States or Congress to levy the appropriate taxes to meet the indebtedness. Now the amendment that is offered does not preclude that at all. It simply prevents the people of the United States from having to pay either principal or interest of the debt of the District of Columbia; which ought to be prevented. It does not seek to go further. It does not preclude Congress from, at any time, levying the tax necessary to meet the interest on these bonds. If it is the object of Congress to saddle the District debt upon the people of the United States, let us know it. If it is not, then let us adopt this amendment and put the question altogether at rest. I do not think that the amendment can do any harm; on the contrary it makes it certain that we do not want to make our constituents shoulder the burdens of other people.

Mr. NEAL. I do not think the reasons which are given by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. McMILLIN] ought to influence this House to adopt the amendment which has been proposed here. These debts were contracted when this District was governed by Congress. The board of public works and other boards which were instrumental in contracting these debts were created by Congress; the people of the District had nothing to do with them. The Government of the United States owns at least $90,000,000 of the property in this District, one-half of the property of the District. There is therefore no reason why the Government of the United States should not pay one-half of the debt, of the interest, and of the current expenses of running the government of the District.

In addition to that, the Forty-fifth Congress, in the organic law which now governs this District, provided that one-half of the current expenses and of the present indebtedness of the District should be provided for by the United States. In other words, for every dollar of tax levied upon the people of this District the Government of the United States will pay $1 out of its general treasury.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Are you in favor of your constituents helping to pay the debt of this District and of the interest thereof?

Mr. NEAL. I am.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not.

Mr. NEAL. I am in favor of my constituents contributing their fair proportion for the payment of one-half of the debt of this District, because my people in common with the rest of the people of the United States own one-half of the property of this District. There is no justice, there is no equity, there is nothing that appeals to a fair and candid mind that will influence me to say that the people of the United States should pay no proportion of the indebtedness of this District or of the current expenses thereof.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] to go without a little further explanation. He assumes that the Government of the United States owns one-half of the property of the District of Columbia, and therefore ought to pay one-half of the taxes of the District. Now, it is true that the Government of the United States owns a great deal of realty in this District, including the grounds occupied by the public buildings and the public parks and the public grounds. It is also true that the Government of the United States takes care of and protects this property at its exclusive expense, and the people of the District are put to no expense therefor.

Now, is it to be assumed that besides the public property improved and protected for the public good and the good of the city one-half of the remainder of the property of this District is the property of the United States? Surely such a proposition will not be assumed. Those who were in the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress will remember that in determining that the Government of the United States was the owner of one-half of the property of this District the property considered was the realty alone, to the entire exclusion of all the personal property of the city.

And in order to make the Government half-owner of the realty it was charged with the ownership of the public property, which is improved and cared for at the exclusive expense of the Government of the United States, and then it was charged with the ownership of all the streets and avenues and alleys of the city, which are common property to everybody. It was said that the title to the streets and avenues was originally in the Government of the United States, and so it was. But the streets, avenues, and alleys in this city, as in all other cities, are public property, and no particular owner ought to be charged with that property for any purpose.

The basis upon which the determination was reached to make the Federal Government pay half the expenses of this District government rested upon that patent fallacy. The personal property was excluded from consideration. No one will doubt that the personal property in this city is much more in value than the realty. Yet for the purpose of making the Government of the United States responsible for half the debts and of the expenses of the District the whole mass of personal property was excluded from consideration, and the Government was charged with the ownership of the streets, alleys, and avenues of the city.

Now, is there any justice in that? Can any member upon this floor go before his constituents, who will be called upon to pay this tax, and upon such a fallacy defend himself against the charge of injustice and oppression? Can he do it? It is true that a great many of us are removed a great way from our constituents. It may be true that a great many of our constituents do not read our proceedings here or know the character of our acts here. But there is a moral obligation, if there is no political obligation—and I think there is both a moral and a political obligation—that we should do right before the forum of conscience; that we should not tax a citizen of one part of the country for the expenses of a citizen of another part of the country.

I agree that it may be proper for the Federal Government to pay a proportion of the expenses of the government of this District on account of its being the Federal capital, and on account of the fact that a great many of the public officers reside here and have the benefits and conveniencies which flow from the improvements of the District. But when you say that because the Government owns half the realty of this city it ought to pay half the taxes, you must remember that that statement is made in view of the fact that the Government is exclusively responsible for the improvement and care of the whole of its realty, and is charged also with the ownership of the avenues, streets, and alleys of the city, and there is left out of this account the entire personal property of the District. When you consider that, it seems to me the proposition must be seen to be so monstrous that it ought to arrest attention.

Now, I am willing to do what is fair and right; but I see no reason why the citizens of the United States at large should be charged with the ordinary taxes of the citizens of the District of Columbia. On the contrary there are reasons why they should not be so charged. Millions of dollars are annually distributed here, being disbursed by the Treasury to public officials. This is a source of prosperity and growth, an element of convenience and wealth to the city. Instead of creating a ground for a charge upon the people of the rest of the Union to pay the taxes of the people here, it is an equity, it seems to me, in exactly the opposite direction. Hence it was that when the bill providing an organic law for the District was passed, I protested most earnestly against it; and whenever the question has come up since, I have endeavored to call the attention of the House to the injustice and unfairness of that bill or any other bill resting upon that basis, aiming to carry out that provision, or to go farther than the payment of the costs of the city government—the payment for gaslight, for water, for improvement of streets and alleys and avenues, the building of culverts, the provision for drainage. If we are to go beyond all this—if, after paying one-half of these expenses the people of the Union generally are to be loaded with the principal and interest of one-half the debt created by the District when it had its own government, it seems to me this goes beyond all reason and all justice.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, if this were an original question—if this were a question de novo, as to whether this Government or Congress should assume any portion of the debt of the District of Columbia, it would be a very different question from that now presented. The simple question now, as I understand, is whether this Government shall deal in the same manner with all the creditors of this District whose claims grow out of acts of the old board of public works. Shall we treat them all alike? That is the whole question. The question is not whether the Government shall assume the payment of these debts. That question has been settled, to a certain extent, by a former Congress. In 1874 Congress passed an act for the purpose of getting rid of the odious District government—this popular government, with its Legislative Assembly, that had run up the debt of the District to millions and millions of dollars. Congress passed an act to put the District of Columbia in bankruptcy in point of fact. We appointed a District commission to govern the District, and a board of audit to determine the amount of its indebtedness. That board of audit went on and allowed a large amount of claims, and the Government of the United States by act of Congress pledged its faith that it would, by a proportional amount of appropriations and by taxation of the property of this District, guarantee to a certain extent the payment of the indebtedness for which bonds were authorized to be issued.

It is not, therefore, a question whether we shall pay this debt or any part of it, but whether we shall deal out equal justice to all creditors who have claims arising under this act of 1874.

In 1876 Congress, deeming that the board of audit had violated the law, cut short their work while they were in the midst of auditing these claims, leaving outstanding many claims which were entitled to be funded into bonds. In addition to that the District commissioners, by the construction which they had placed upon the law giving them authority, had increased the debt to a much larger extent than was anticipated. They were going on at that time doing a large amount of work. Now, here are parties having certificates which were audited by the board of audit, about which there is no dispute, and here are other parties who did work, but whose claims have not been audited. They come here now and ask that they shall be put upon the same footing precisely as those who have heretofore had their claims allowed, Congress having, in point of fact, done what amounted to a guarantee of this debt.

Now, by an amendment which I have offered to this bill it is provided that by no possibility shall these claims exceed, as I understand, the amount of $1,100,000. These claims are due to these parties as much as were the claims which have already been funded into 3.65 bonds. The simple and only question now is whether we shall deal differently with these parties whose claims are still outstanding from the manner in which we dealt with the other claimants whose indebtedness has been converted into bonds. I say that, without going into the question whether we are to pay one-half or any other portion of the debt of this District, there is no other course for us to pursue than to see that these outstanding claims are audited and, if just, paid. These claims, amounting, as I have said, to $1,100,000, are composed in part of certificates already audited by the board of audit, but never funded into 3.65 bonds, and in part of claims of parties who have done work for the District, expending their money and their labor, but whose claims were not audited by the board of audit. That is the whole case.

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the gentleman before he takes his seat allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGHT. I find that in the act of June 20, 1874, there is a provision against the recognition of any further indebtedness against the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCKNER. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. BRIGHT. I say that in the latter clause of the eighth section there is a prohibition against any further recognition of indebtedness on the part of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand the gentleman. By the act of 1874, as I have said, Congress put the District of Columbia into bankruptcy. That act provided for auditing all claims of every description mentioned in the act, which is very explicit.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire merely to get at the status of the question which is now before Congress and particularly its legal relations to the bill. For the benefit of the gentleman and of the House I beg to read a part of section 8 of the act of 1874:

> No property shall be advertised for sale or sold for the collection of any assessment authorized by the Legislative Assembly by the act entitled "An act creating drainage and sewerage sections in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and providing for the payment of the construction of sewers and drains therein by assessments and issuing certificates therefor," approved on the 26th day of June, 1873, until otherwise ordered by Congress; and it shall be unlawful to issue any further certificates of indebtedness authorized by said act.

I understand that to be an estoppel of the issue of any further certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. BUCKNER. Oh, no, sir. Let me explain. That act merely prohibits the further issue of what were known as sewerage certificates. The very object of the act of 1874 was to settle and adjudicate all these claims against the District.

Mr. BRIGHT. I find that this bill provides for the adjudication of sewerage certificates and all other obligations and indebtedness relating as far back as 1870.

Mr. BUCKNER. Right on that point——

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. That has been stricken out of the bill by the amendment.

Mr. BUCKNER. The amendment that was made was this: in line 13, after the word "District," to insert the following:

> Provided, Said Court of Claims shall not take jurisdiction of any claim against the District of Columbia which was not presented to the board of audit under the provisions of the act of June 20, 1874, and March 3, 1875, except such claims as have arisen out of contracts made with the District commissioners since the passage of said act of June 20, 1874.

That cuts out all these claims of that kind.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will call the attention of my friend from Missouri to the breadth of jurisdiction conferred in this act which provides for including all outstanding written obligations of the levy court of said District.

Mr. HUNTON. That has been stricken out.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is not in the bill now, then?

Mr. HUNTON. It is not; it was stricken out.

Mr. BRIGHT. As I understand it, then, this provision has been stricken out that the said Court of Claims shall have the same power to proceed in the same manner, &c. Now, so far as I am concerned, there is some confusion in my mind in relation to these bonds, and I should like to inquire further what character of claims are comprehended under this bill, and which are to be submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BUCKNER. Under the amendments already made they comprehend, in the first place, that class of claims which were not presented to the board of audit, and, of course, no bond issued in payment of them. It includes those claims where measurements by the District engineer had not been certified, and for work then in progress, but which had not been completed, and which had not been presented to the board of audit. That is one class of claims, and it is about all; because we cut off all claims not presented according to law to the board of audit under the act.

Mr. BRIGHT. What makes the balance?

Mr. BUCKNER. The House at the extra session, in the discussion of this bill, adopted the amendment I have read, which confines the jurisdiction now to the mere allowance of those claims which constitute the class I have mentioned, certificates of the board of audit not funded in 3.65 bonds, and where the measurement of the engineers had not been made on work then progressing. Those are all the items which can be audited.

Mr. BRIGHT. How as to these levy claims? I should like to hear some explanation of them.

Mr. BUCKNER. They are expressly cut out in the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand the gentleman to say they are cut out.

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir; and the court will have no jurisdiction over them.

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to say, then, if I understand the object of this bill, it is simply to open the act of 1874 and the act passed in amendment thereto, in order to let in the class of claims provided for in this bill; and in order to test their validity, a jurisdiction has been provided the Court of Claims; to which they shall be referred.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Mr. Speaker, the exact point presented by the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama has not been met by the debate thus far. The question presented, as I understand it, is simply this: is the United States Government or the District of Columbia the debtor in these bonds? I understand the amendment as presented to be a declaration that the United States Government is not the debtor, but that the District of Columbia is. I am in favor of that position, and it is, in my judgment, a most important one. It is a question that ought to be set at rest and settled now by this House and by this Congress, because if it be determined that the United States Government shall be the debtor—that is, that it shall be liable to pay this debt of the District of Columbia—then let us determine that definitely, so there shall be no doubt or debate upon the question hereafter, and that the creditor lending money for the cancellation of this indebtedness may know that it is being loaned upon the credit of the Government of the United States and not the credit of the District of Columbia. For I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of the United States can borrow money at a cheaper rate of interest than the District of Columbia, and if it is to be the real debtor on the bond let it be so understood and so declared now, in order that we may have the advantage of the loan of money at a less rate of interest.

I am not now, Mr. Speaker, committing myself upon the question whether I should be in favor of the United States assuming this liability of the District or not, but simply desire to have the question presented by the pending amendment so distinctly brought to the attention of the House that it may be enabled to vote understandingly upon it. At the last session of Congress, while this bill was pending, I asked the honorable gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of the committee reporting this bill, whether it was the fact that the United States Government was the debtor upon these bonds. And I understood him to say to the House, and I understood also from other gentlemen of the committee, that under the law the United States Government was not the debtor, but that the obligation rested exclusively upon the District. If that be so, it should now be distinctly declared by this House, so that in the future there may be no question about it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to intermeddle in this debate, so far as details are concerned, because I am not familiar with them, and therefore I shall not contribute anything to the enlightenment of the House as to the particular items of this debt. But, sir, some things have been said by gentlemen who have spoken which seem to me to indicate a drift of opinion that this is like any other city, and ought to govern its own interests and pay its own expenses just as the city of Buffalo or the city of Detroit ought to do. I want to call gentlemen's minds to a fact which makes this city stand alone among all the cities of the world. There never was a body of men who would have located or laid out a city as Washington was located or laid out for merely ordinary city purposes. No such thing as this was ever seen on the globe as the location of a city with avenues so broad, so far-reaching, and developed as they are here about the site of this building and the site of the Executive Mansion, making the radii of a wheel or circle for the purpose of defense in case the Capitol or Executive Mansion should ever be assailed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he does not think a community would organize this city on the plan it has been organized if the consideration were the Federal capital, and the millions of dollars which are now spent here were to be spent upon it?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all. I will say on that subject what I think will answer the gentleman from Georgia. This city was laid out because a very great event had occurred where Congress was sitting. The revolutionary army became mutinous because they did not have their pay—what had been promised them—and there was such a terror at one time it was thought unsafe to continue the Congress longer in session at that city. An appeal was made to the authorities of the city, but they could do nothing. Appeal was made to the authorities of the State, but they could do nothing. The Congress was there, pilgrims and strangers and guests in a city that could not defend them, and in a State that could not defend them. Now, therefore, the fathers said a situation of that kind requires that we shall have a territory and district of our own, over which no State, no mayoralty, or no city organization can have any control whatever, except what it derives from us. That was the origin of creating a district ten miles square, or less, in which the government should be solely vested in the Congress of the United States, in order that Congress should be as supreme there as it would be on the very floor of its Capitol.

That was the reason, then, of the establishment of this District; and when it had been established under the direction of Washington, whose far-sighted wisdom has marked with his finger-marks all this District, remembering what had occurred in Paris, where they had seen barricades, and mobs, and menace about the Corps Legislatif, he directed his French engineer to lay out this city as you see it, with great diagonal avenues radiating like the spokes of a wheel all about this Capitol, so that if the time should ever come when we were menaced by a mutiny or mob we might fill these great avenues with our artillery to protect the Legislature of the nation, and do the same around the Executive Mansion to protect the President of the United States.

These broad avenues, then, were laid out for the United States, and not for the expectant populations which would stay here. What people of the globe, settling for commercial purposes, would lay out an avenue like that of Pennsylvania avenue, or Massachusetts avenue, or any of the other great avenues of this city? What broad-minded statesmanship can come in and say: let this people pay all the vast expense of this capital? Let it be remembered that this is the only city on the round globe in which the Government owns the fee-simple to every foot of every street and avenue in it. We could to-day, if we pleased, pass a law which should build a solid block of buildings from the western foot of this Capitol to the Treasury, filling either side of the whole of Pennsylvania avenue with buildings, or to make it a canal, and not one man living along the street would have any lawful recourse against us except as we choose as a mere matter of mercy to give it. The citizens who own property on our streets do not own to the middle of the street; they do not own even an easement on the street, except the grace of the imperial power of Congress within this District grants it to them.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me finish what I was about to say. And therefore when gentlemen talk about this as an ordinary city with ordinary assessments, an ordinary people, (and remembering furthermore a large share of the people living here are only accidental and temporary residents,) I say, therefore, it places this city of Washington altogether out of the category of ordinary municipal governments.

When I first came here Congress had treated this city very much as a capricious step-mother would treat an orphan child committed to her charge. Sometimes the capital was helped by Congress, sometimes it was harshly and severely neglected, sometimes a bill was gotten through on the petition of some citizens allowing a certain street to be graded in a certain way and the people graded that street eight, ten, or twelve inches higher than the grade of the neighboring street. There had been no order. There had been no unity. There had been no regularity; but at last we have gotten what I believe to be in this capital now about the best form of municipal government which has ever been devised, a government by commissioners whose legislative power is given to them by Congress. We cannot "farm out" as we tried to do once before legislation for this District to any one else than ourselves; our legislative power cannot be delegated. We must therefore legislate for this District and we must legislate for it in that broad-minded way that the history of the city requires us to do.

One word more and I am done. Up to a few years ago there had been no order, no agreement, no understanding. If a street was to be paved the citizens paid for it and then petitioned Congress to pay for that portion of the pavement which lay in front of a public square or a post-office or other public building on the same street, and it depended altogether upon the graciousness of Congress whether it would pay for that part or leave it unpaid.

Now, at last we have settled down upon an equitable arrangement—it may not be just the most equitable—but an arrangement by which a certain per cent. of all the expenses of running this municipal government shall be paid by the nation that owns so much of the property in the District, and the rest shall be paid by assessments made by general law upon the private property-holders in the city. Now, that is the only decent, just, equitable mode of settling the relations between the nation and those who live here as private citizens. I am not saying now that the adjustment is the exact per cent. that it ought to be; but that it should be a fixed per cent. whereby the laws that govern the people of this District shall be understood to be fixed and regular and not depend upon the daily caprice of what one Congress and another may do is to my mind as clear as any proposition in the world. I am glad to say that the gentlemen who have the thankless task of attending to the interests of the District of Columbia—for it is always more or less an onerous and thankless burden—are determined to carry that principle through and are generally carrying it through in their legislation; and I hope that we who live in remote parts of the country will not treat this committee as we have in times past so often treated them, as a sort of intruders, as men who are trying to make our citizens a thousand miles away pay for something they had no interest in.

The people of my district have an interest in every brick, every stone, every ton of iron, every nail in every public building in this city. It is the capital of a nation, and not a city that is the mere pensioner upon the country of an indulgent Congress. I am glad this committee has stood upon these doctrines, and in so far as this bill conforms to them I am with them for the bill, although, as I said at the outset, I know nothing about the details.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] desires to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Does he yield for that purpose?

Mr. REAGAN. I will not trespass upon the gentleman's courtesy. I thought he was through. I desire to reply to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have finished what I desired to say.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Ohio brings his great ability to support what I believe to be a measure of absolute injustice, and he rests his advocacy of this measure upon a legal proposition which he stated in his discussion of this subject—that is, that the Government owns the streets, alleys, and avenues of this city and may block them all up at any day it pleases. It may be my fault that I do not know whether the distinguished gentleman is a lawyer or not. If I knew he were I would not make the remark I am going to make. If he is not, then I say there is not a respectable lawyer, in my judgment, in America who will risk his reputation on such a statement as he has made—that anybody, Government or private individual, has a right to interfere with the ownership of private property and the use of the public highways of this city by blocking up the streets.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me, I desire to inform him that the court has so decided. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Before I accept a statement so broad as that, I should like to see the decision on which it is based. There may have been contingencies in which something of that kind has been said; but I do not believe it can be true that owners of private property on the streets and avenues of Washington hold that property at the mercy of somebody else, as to its value and its use. Can it be that the laws will encourage the ownership and possession of property in fee, giving the absolute ownership to the citizen, and then that this citizen, contrary to all law, shall be deprived of the value of that property without just compensation by the Government if the property be taken for public uses? In answer to that question I refer to the provision of the Constitution that no private property shall be taken except for public uses, and not then without just compensation. What is the difference between confiscating the property itself and destroying its value and use? If there is meaning in that provision of the Constitution, if the law may be relied upon to protect a citizen in the possession and use of his property, by what rule of reason, by what principle of law, by what doctrine of the Constitution, can we destroy the use of private property in the hands of a private individual without just compensation rendered by the Government?

I admit, sir, that for public uses we may take away or destroy private property on paying just compensation therefor. But the advocacy the gentleman from Ohio makes of the distribution of the relative amounts the Government and the people of this District shall pay for the expenses of the District is made to rest on the legal fallacy to which I have alluded, and in my judgment, I repeat again, no lawyer of respectability would risk his reputation by assuming that doctrine, and no court could pronounce or enforce it without violating distinctly and plainly the provisions of the Constitution.

That is one point of which the gentleman spoke. I do not propose to follow him in going back to the causes which led to the selection of this city as the capital of the United States. That is not necessary for the purpose now. The other point on which the gentleman dwelt was that he was for some percentage being paid by the Government for the support of the government of the District of Columbia. I take it the gentleman was perfectly safe in that proposition, for I do not suppose there is one member of this House that is not in favor of the Government paying a reasonable percentage of the expenses of the District. That is not the question involved here. No one claims that the Government should pay none of the expenses. The question is, what portion should we pay?

And I was in hopes that the gentleman, with his massive intellect and great experience, would have given us the benefit of his knowledge and information upon this interesting but controverted point, the precise point in issue before this House.

I have assumed that the percentage allowed was, under the circumstances, unjust, and that the mode pursued in ascertaining that percentage was flagrantly unjust. I myself feel, all of us feel, that the General Government should pay some proper percentage of the expenses of this District. But when it is said that the Government shall pay one-half of the expenses of the District, and when the entire personal property of the District is excluded from the estimate on which that percentage is based; when the Government must at its own expense improve all its property, the District not paying one cent for the beautifying and adornment of the public grounds or the grounds that surround the public buildings in this city—the Federal Government from its own Treasury pays every dollar of that expense, the District paying not one cent of it—when the Government pays all the expenses of improving the public grounds, and the fact that it is the owner of those grounds is used as an argument why it should pay one-half of the expenses of the city government, and it seems now one-half of the debts of the city also, it seems to me that is entirely unjust.

And when we ask where its half of the property exists, we are told that it consists of the streets and avenues and alleys which are common to every property-holder in the city and in which every property-holder has a vested right. It might as well be said of the original owner in fee of any tract of land on which a town or city may be laid out that because he was the original owner of that land he would have the right to close up the streets of that town from the use of the subsequent vendees, although they had a title in fee and although the law provides an easement for every owner over every public highway from his property to the outer world.

Now, if there had been a fair estimate of property in this District, if the whole property of this District had been considered, if the proper proportion of the Government had been ascertained without a fictitious arrangement which violates our plain and known knowledge of the facts, it seems to me it would have been better when we come to reason upon this subject. But what is proposed? It is proposed that because the Government owns and has aided in improving the streets and avenues of this city, therefore it shall pay the taxes of the private property-holders whose property is not brought into the estimate at all. How many millions of personal property is there in this city? Yet not one dollar of that property is estimated. Why should we make the people of the country at large pay the taxes of the people of this city, because the Government of the United States owns and aids in improving the streets and alleys which form easements for and is for the benefit of the citizens of this District?

That was the objection I had to this bill. I think the proportion is too high. It seems to me that when we provide for the Government of the United States paying one-half of the expenses of lighting this city, and certainly private citizens have more than three-fourths of the benefit of it; and when we provide that the Government shall pay one-half of the expenses of watering this city, and certainly private owners secure more than three-fourths of the benefits of that; and when the Government must pay one-half of the expenses of improving all the streets, avenues, and alleys, and certainly private individuals enjoy not less than three-fourths of the benefit of them; and when we provide that the Government shall pay one-half of the expenses of the sewerage of this city, and no one will pretend that the Government enjoys more than one-fourth of the benefit of that; and when we provide that in addition to all that it shall pay one-half of the current expenses of the government, including interest on the debt, it seems to me that is too much. That is supplemented by a proposition to fasten upon the Government of the United States a debt created without its authority, without its agency, and by other people. That it seems to me is a violation of every rule of right and reason, and a course of action which no man can go before his constituents and justify.

Mr. COX. I do not undertake to oppose this special section. I suppose that if some men have been paid their claims, others ought to be paid, on a principle which I will not now enunciate.

But I fully agree with the last remark that fell from my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] concerning the percentage which has been fixed for the expenditures of this District, providing that the National Legislature—the National Legislature with a large N—shall pay one-half of those expenses. Since gentlemen on the other side have come into power they have been bringing into and crystallizing that principle for the government of this District. Now, I never agreed to it. Why should the United States Government be bound to pay one-half of the expenses of this District?

The District authorities here can create an indebtedness. Does my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] know that the District authorities here may create the indebtedness, both current and permanent, and we are bound to pay the bill without even the consent of our constituents? That is all wrong. The Government is unwilling, unadvised, a mere looker-on; yet for any purpose—for police, for sewerage, for pavements, for everything that is done here—all the Federal Government is able to do is to look on, with the poor privilege of sometimes saying, "You may take one-half, since you cannot take all."

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is time that this thing should be fixed. I am tired of making my protest against giving to Washington City its magnificence and its splendor at the expense of our own constituents. Why, sir, when I represented the old Columbus metropolitan district we never thought of asking Cincinnati or Cleveland to assist us in paying our expenses for police, for gas, for sewerage, or anything of that kind. No one in New York City thinks of helping Albany in its local taxation. Yet the whole of the United States is called on again and again to pay one-half of the indebtedness of this District contracted without our consent.

I know this city is getting to be splendid, palatial, magnificent. I know people will erect monuments to those who have made this city grand, glorious, peculiar—the capital of the Nation with a large N. I know, further, that with all this splendor, all this magnificence, all this paradise of avenues and trees and flowers, "the slime of the serpent is over them all."

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, the eloquence and arguments of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] if they have any force whatever, should be addressed to legislation looking to the modification or repeal of the act establishing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. They have no proper place in the discussion of this bill. What is the proposition before the House upon which we ask a vote? It is a bill providing that certain claims against the District, some of which are conceded by the commissioners and by everybody upon this floor, so far as I know, to be just, shall be submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; and providing, further, that such sums as the Court of Claims shall adjudge to be due upon these claims shall be paid by the commissioners of the District in precisely the same way as similar claims have been paid by them heretofore, namely, by the issue of 3.65 bonds of the District.

Now it is claimed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SAMFORD] and those supporting his amendment that the obligation or liability of the United States is increased by this bill. Sir, the nature and extent of the obligation of the United States were fixed by the original bill providing for the issue of these bonds; and this bill does not propose to modify or change, to lessen or increase it in any way. As I have said, it merely proposes to pay a certain kind of claims in the same manner and with the same kind of bonds as other claims of similar character have been paid heretofore. The obligation of the United States is explicit. The language by which it is defined is as follows:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

This we do not propose to change. On the contrary, if the pending amendment prevails we shall have a class of bonds nominally of the same issue but really of different tenor and security. If gentlemen are so anxious to change the form of government of this District I submit it will be better and more manly for them to do it by a bill for that purpose than to attack it in this indirect manner.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD.]

The amendment of Mr. SAMFORD was read, as follows:

Amend section 6 by adding:
Provided, That the Government of the United States is in no event liable for the payment of the principal or interest of any bonds authorized to be issued under the provisions of this bill.

The amendment of Mr. CLAFLIN was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "or interest."

The SPEAKER. The effect of this amendment is to make the United States responsible for the interest but not for the principal.

The amendment of Mr. CLAFLIN was not agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SAMFORD, there were—ayes 71, noes 80.

Mr. LOWE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 117, not voting 91; as follows:

So the amendment was disagreed to.

During the vote the following announcements were made:

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with Mr. RYAN, of Kansas.

Mr. SAWYER. My colleague, Mr. FROST, is paired with Mr. DICK.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I understand I am paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. MYERS. I am paired with Mr. COWGILL, of Indiana.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, is absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague, Mr. BACHMAN, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. FISHER.

Mr. DEUSTER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. POUND.

Mr. WILBER. I am paired with Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, on political and financial questions; I do not consider this either, and therefore I shall record my vote.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am paired generally with Mr. EWING, of Ohio, and if he were present I should vote "no" on the pending amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SPARKS, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. FORT, both being absent attending the funeral of Mr. Lay, of Missouri.

On motion of Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question next recurs on the sixth section.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is further amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the sixth section add the following:
Provided, The bonds issued by authority of this act shall be of no more binding force as to their payment on the Government of the United States than the 3.65 bonds issued under the authority of act of June 20, 1874.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understand there will be no objection to that. The only object I have in introducing that amendment is that the vote which has just been given may not be taken to be a legislative construction of the validity of these bonds. There is some question, sir, as to the act of June 20, 1874—a well-grounded difference of opinion—as to the liability of the Federal Government in reference to these bonds.

The amendment I offered a few moments ago having been voted down would leave these bonds open to the construction that the Legislature had them under advisement, and the Federal Government was responsible, not only for the principal, but for the interest. I do not desire the House to be committed to any such construction as that, and therefore I have offered the amendment that they shall be binding on the Government simply to the extent that the original bonds are.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word of that amendment. So far as the details of this bill are concerned, I have not given a great deal of attention to them, and my purpose in rising is not to discuss them. But, sir, like the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] I do feel that a gross injustice is done to the people of the United States outside of the District, because of the amount they are compelled to expend under present legislation in the support of the government of this city of Washington. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in his remarks was exceedingly clear in many of his statements, especially those in which he said this capital was different from any other city in the world—different from that of any in the United States—and therefore it was absurd to insist that the people here should pay the entire expenses of the government of this District. I say it was exceedingly clear, but the main element of its perspicuity arises from the fact that the statements have never been controverted and never will be by any one in the House, for, sir, we all agree that it stands upon a different footing from any other city in this Union, from any on earth, and that some portion of the expense should be shared by the whole country.

But the gentleman from Ohio commenced his speech by invoking the name of Washington, in connection with the laying out of this humble city as it was in the beginning. Why, sir, mobs in various cities, during our struggle for independence, had been seeking to intimidate Congress in legislation. Mobs in Philadelphia especially had drawn attention to this matter, and it became a consideration of prime importance in the minds of the public men of the country—in the minds of all the members of Congress—not of General Washington alone, but on the part of all of our public men, that the Federal Legislature should be removed from the great cities and placed at a distance from the centers of manufacturing industries, in a quiet, retired place which should be selected and which should be under the absolute control of the Federal Government in order that Federal legislation might be free and untrammeled. A commission was appointed, engineers were selected; and the gentleman does injustice to the scientific men who proposed the plan of this city to ascribe it to General Washington, who simply did what was his duty in communicating that plan to the two Houses of Congress, when it was adopted.

But the gentleman, if he seeks lessons of wisdom for our action here by going back to the fathers, and especially to General Washington himself, ought not to have stopped where he did. I have before me a carefully prepared statement of the expenditures made by the people of the United States for the city and District, from 1800 down to 1871. Why, sir, it would seem almost astounding, in the midst of the eloquence with which we are accustomed to be treated in relation to the debts of this District, when I state the amount of money expended during those seventy-one years, that is from 1800 down to 1871. We find the total amount was only $1,002,785.52. In detail it is as follows:

Statement of expenditures on account of improvements of avenues and streets in the city of Washington, from 1800 to 1871, inclusive.

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1800	$10,000 00	1856	$7,229 58

1852	36,277 33	1870	2,051 76
1853	15,329 37	1871	10,000 00
1854	36,933 77
1855	17,666 69	Total	1,002,785 52

I have also before me, Mr. Speaker, the report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, under date of November 26, 1879. How stand the expenditures on the part of the Government in this District during the past year? How do the expenditures for 1879, one year, contrast with the amount of expenditures for the seventy-one years from 1800 to 1871? How do they contrast now with the expenditures of our fathers in the days of virtue, in the days of those great exemplars whom we are told in our action here we should imitate? This report from the office of the commissioners of the District of Columbia is addressed to the President. The receipts into the treasury of the District of Columbia from all sources for the year ending June 30, 1879, are stated to be $3,467,665.52. Appropriations by Congress for general expenses are put down at $1,716,533.23; but in addition there are special appropriations for filling canal; for food, medicine, and medical attendance for poor; water rents and taxes and trust funds, amounting to $134,602.88, or nearly $2,000,000 out of the $3,467,665.52 appropriated by Congress. And this is for a single year. More than one-half of the total sum was paid by the people of the United States. They paid a larger sum than was expended by Congress for the support of the government of this District from 1800 to 1871.

The days of patriotism, perhaps, have grown apace. The time of enterprise came. It came to New York City; it came to Washington City, and the real-estate pool, and rings, and plunderers of the Treasury came upon the scene. Then were gathered and furnished to Congress all the special pleadings which could be urged for extensive appropriations, and nothing but the very excesses committed so arrested the attention of the country that it struck down the old District government. During the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses, while these matters were fresh in the public mind, it was impossible to bind the people of the country to such appropriations, to such proportions of expenditure as we have now established. Time went on, and through the special pleading of men about the corridors of this Capitol, parties interested, there was a one-sided view presented, and, as the gentleman from Texas says, we are now bound to the payment of one-half of the expenditures of this city government.

Because, forsooth, in the original grant this fee-simple right to the streets was reserved to the Federal Government; because it was the policy of Congress to see its territory should remain absolutely under its control, this fact has been seized upon, that these streets which are designed principally for the convenience of the business of this city belong in fee-simple to the Federal Government, is thrust constantly into our faces as evidence that, owning the property, we are under obligation to pay the enormous sums of money which have been called for.

But greater danger has yet to come. When these questions were up in Congress I have seen, as other members have seen, capitalists interested in real estate here crowding about the lobbies. There was once a greater check upon extravagant expenditure—the heavy burden of taxation established a sort of conservatism, but under the principle laid down by the law, in reference to which this city is different from any other in the United States, the people bear but one-half of the burden of taxation, and hence the greater inducement on their part to extravagance in carrying on the affairs of this District. I know not what schemes are ahead of us; I know that circumstances are inviting, and I fear that the time will come, when this city, instead of being the modest capital of a republic, will far surpass in grandeur the capitals of the great kingdoms and empires abroad. There is danger, in my opinion, because of the fact that this Government is bound to the payment of one-half of the expenditures, and it may be that hereafter expenditures may reach a point when those which now excite our complaint will bear the same proportion to the expenditures on the part of the Government in 1879 that the expenditures for that year bear to those for seventy-one years from 1800 to 1871, exceeding in that year, as I have said, the expenditures for the whole period from 1800 to 1871, or for seventy-one years.

I would be glad, sir, if it were proper that this matter here now were in a condition to be discussed from several other stand-points; but, as it is, I am indebted to the courtesy of the gentleman from Virginia for the little time I have occupied. The object I have had in view was to unite my voice with that of the gentleman from Texas in protesting against the absurd and grotesque proposition that we should be bound for one-half of the burdens of taxation that are to be imposed for this District.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia would be very proper if we had under consideration an amendment to the act of Congress organizing a government for the District of Columbia; but they have no application to the amendments nor to the bill now before us.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. If they are proper and there is any force in them, is it not time we were providing for a repeal of the very law out of which the necessity for the passage of this proposition originated, so that by such a repeal the people of the United States should be put on a fair and proper footing?

Mr. NEAL. I will answer the gentleman in the course of what I have to say. Governments for the District of Columbia organized by Congress, in which the people had nothing whatever to say, have created this indebtedness which it is proposed shall be audited and paid. The people were not consulted in regard to them, and there is nothing, therefore, fair or honest in saying that they shall be responsible for debts which they could never have created had the power been given to them or the poor privilege accorded to them to say whether or not they should have been created.

I wish to reply briefly to some of the remarks which the gentleman from Texas made on the amendment which was considered prior to the one now pending. These debts, Mr. Speaker, were for sewer and for street and avenue improvements, in which the people of the United States were just as much interested as the people of the District. It is true, as the gentleman has stated, that assessments were made on the public property, but it is also true that like assessments were made on the property of the people of this District, and they have paid them exactly as the Government of the United States has paid its assessments. But these debts were created for general purposes, purposes for which the property of the United States was just as much benefited as that of individuals, and it is therefore entirely right, and there is a moral obligation resting on us, to provide for payment in such way as that the people of the United States shall pay at least the proportion that their property bears to the entire property of the District.

I shall not undertake myself to say what the public property in the District is worth, but I have here, Mr. Speaker, the statement which was made by the honorable and distinguished gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] who I am sorry is not present to-day, at the last session of Congress when this bill was under consideration. He said:

The public property within this city amounts to at least $90,000,000.

Now, then, there was an assessment of the property of the people of this District made within the past year, and the entire assessment of the real and personal property of the people of the District was less than $100,000,000. So that the statement I have made that the public property of the District is equal to one-half the entire property of the District is not very far out of the way. If that be the case, it is nothing more than just, nothing more than right that the public property should bear one-half the burdens.

But that is not the question which fairly comes before us now. The question is, shall we do justice to these contractors who have by reason of the repeal of the law which provided for the auditing of their claims failed to have their claims audited? It was no fault of theirs. The claims were filed within the time allowed by law; but the law was repealed and therefore their claims were not audited. They simply ask the privilege of going before the Court of Claims, prosecuting their claims against the District, and receiving the same justice which has been given to other claimants who have been more fortunate in having their claims audited. I trust that the moral sense of this House will not hesitate a moment to do justice to these men who have been knocking at the doors of Congress for the poor privilege of receiving the pay which is justly due them for labor which they expended years ago.

I move the previous question on the amendment and section.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD.]

Mr. REAGAN. Let it be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the section as amended, and it was agreed to.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the section, as amended, was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. In all cases prosecuted under the provisions of this act it shall be the duty of the claimant, after the commencement of said actions, to prosecute them in said court diligently; and after any issue of law or of fact shall be joined in any case, the Attorney-General shall have power to place the same on the trial calendar of said court for trial; and in all cases when any case has been reached in its order on the calendar, and the trial thereof has been unreasonably delayed by the claimant, the said court may, on motion of the Attorney-General, on notice to the claimant, or his counsel, attorney, or solicitor, dismiss said claim; and such dismissal or final judgment on any claim shall be a conclusive bar against any further prosecution of such claim before any court or tribunal whatsoever: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay according to the provisions of this act the said judgments from time to time as they may be presented.

Mr. HUNTON. I move the previous question on the seventh section.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the seventh section was agreed to.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the seventh section was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I offer as an additional section, which has the approval of the committee, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. No claim shall be presented to or considered by the Court of Claims under the provisions of this act which was rejected by the board of audit.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEAL. I offer as an additional section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. No assignee or transferee of any claim provided for in this bill shall be entitled to prosecute any such claim so assigned to him before said Court of Claims according to the provisions of this bill for any larger amount than was paid to the original owner and assignor for the same, including interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the transfer of the same to the date of the bonds herein provided for to be issued in payment thereof; and no such assignment shall impair the right of the original owner to prosecute for and receive as herein provided for the amount due him less the amount received by the assignee, as above set forth, according to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to say one word in explanation of this section. The object of it is to provide that persons who have purchased these claims shall receive the money which they paid for them, with interest on them, and that the remainder shall go to the original contractor. The facts are these: These claims have been bought up by speculators at the rate of about forty cents on the dollar. Contractors have been compelled to sell their claims, in order that they might pay their workingmen, and for other purposes. Now, these gentlemen have taken the risk. It is, in a certain sense of the word, a gratuity. I propose in this amendment that they shall receive their money back with interest, and that the balance shall go to pay the original contractors. It seems to me it should commend itself to the fair judgment of every man in this House.

Mr. BARBER. Is the interest to come out of the balance of the claim?

Mr. NEAL. Certainly. The party gets his money back with 6 per cent. interest.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. He says these claims have been bought up by speculators. Does he know who those speculators are?

Mr. NEAL. My information, whether correct or not I do not know, is that the First National Bank of New York holds nearly a million dollars of these claims.

Mr. WARNER. It seems to me to be a very strange proceeding which is proposed in this amendment. We authorize those who have purchased these claims at forty cents on the dollar to prosecute the claims in the courts and to receive payment at the forty cents or whatever they may have purchased them for and 6 per cent. interest. Then we go back and authorize a man who has parted with all his property right in the claim to prosecute his claim against the Government for the balance of it. Now, if we could have this done generally in our financial transactions over the country we might, some of us, be very glad. But that is not the way we do our business generally. I move, therefore, as an amendment to the amendment, that the last clause be stricken out; or I call for a division of the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Has the gentleman considered the question of what would be the condition of those claims which have been several times transferred between the original claimant and the present holder?

Mr. NEAL. I think the amendment is broad enough to cover all that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] calls for a division of the amendment; and the question will first be taken upon that portion of the amendment which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No assignee or transferee of any claim provided for in this bill shall be entitled to prosecute any such claim so assigned to him before said Court of Claims, according to the provisions of this bill, for any larger amount than was paid to the original owner and assignor for the same, including interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the transfer of the same to the date of the bonds herein provided for to be issued in payment thereof.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want to say a word on this amendment. I am surprised that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] should offer such an amendment. If I understand the facts, they are about as follows: It is alleged that the District of Columbia owed certain parties, months perhaps years ago, a debt or debts. The District of Columbia or the Government of the United States failed to provide the money with which to pay those debts. The parties to whom those debts were owing saw proper to part with their claims, as has been alleged by the gentleman, at some price or prices satisfactory to them. Who they were on the one hand who sold and on the other hand who bought I do not know and I do not care.

The gentleman now seeks to come in and by this act not only to provide for the payment of that which the District or the Government of the United States, one or both, owed, but also to determine that there shall be paid to the purchasers what they paid for these claims with 6 per cent. interest thereon, and that the balance of the claim shall be paid to those who years ago sold their claims.

That is a proposition for legislative interference the like of which I never heard of any legislative body proposing to engage in before. In paying what we owe we propose not to pay a part of it to the person we owe, but to pay it to a person we do not owe, and then call the debt paid.

We can, if we choose, do this: we can repudiate outright this debt, in whole or in part, if that is what the gentleman wants to do. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] offers an amendment providing that we will pay these contractors just what they paid for these claims, with 6 per cent. interest, and that we will not pay anybody the balance. That amendment is more equitable than the original amendment, and I will vote for it in preference to the amendment of his colleague, [Mr. NEAL.]

Mr. SIMONTON. Do you not think that this amendment would be an impairing of the contracts made between these parties?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes, I think so. We might, however, repudiate 60 per cent. of this indebtedness, if you please, and make a present of the amount repudiated to the original vendor of these claims; and that is just what the amendment proposes to do.

The question was upon agreeing to the first clause of the additional section proposed by Mr. NEAL.

Mr. FINLEY. I move, instead of calling for a division of the proposed section, to amend it by striking out these words:

And no such assignment shall impair the right of the original owner to prosecute for and recover, as herein provided for, the amount due him less the amount received by the assignee as above set forth according to the provisions of this bill.

I believe such an amendment will have the preference over a division of the section. I believe it is in order to perfect the section by amendment.

The SPEAKER. A division of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] will enable the House to accept or reject either or both of the substantive propositions contained in that amendment. If the House is in favor of striking out the second branch of the proposed amendment, it can vote it down when the question comes to be taken upon agreeing to the second branch.

Mr. FINLEY. Very well.

Mr. NEAL. I now call the previous question on the amendment which I have proposed.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof both the first and second branches of the amendment were rejected.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SIMONTON. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being upon a division—ayes 30, noes 99; one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 86, noes 73.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HUNTON said: I suppose it will satisfy gentlemen on both sides of the House to have the previous question ordered on the passage of this bill, so that it will come up to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The effect of ordering the previous question upon this bill will be to bring it up as unfinished business to-morrow morning, should the House now adjourn. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMONTON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order is equivalent to an objection. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COFFROTH,] that the House now adjourn, there were—ayes 86, noes 73.

Mr. NEAL. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 14 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. NEAL. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. NEAL and Mr. SIMONTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 99, noes not counted.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

Before the announcement of the result the following business was transacted:

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 877) to relieve the Treasurer of the United States from the amount now charged to him and deposited with the several States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have a word to say on this bill, and then I shall move its reference.

It will be recollected that in 1836 we had no public debt and there was a surplus in the Treasury of some $40,000,000 or $50,000,000. An act was passed in June, 1836, depositing about $28,000,000 of this amount with the different States. There were twenty-odd States that received a part of the money. That has been charged upon the books of the Treasury, and is now charged to the different States. It stands there now as money deposited in bank, and every statement made by the Treasury from any of its offices has to contain the $28,000,000, either deducted or added, or a note made of it. After consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and other officers, I have introduced the bill just read by its title. I have here a communication from the Register's office, giving a history of the transaction; and I move that it be printed and referred with the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, as it will require an appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill, with the accompanying communication, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 878) to authorize the Worthington and Sioux Falls Railroad Company to extend its road from the village of Sioux Falls, in the Territory of Dakota, in a westerly direction to the east bank of the Missouri River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 879) to amend an act to increase the pension of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet, or the sight of both eyes, in the service of their country, approved June 17, 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 880) for the relief of J. A. Hodges; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 881) for the relief of Judson S. Post; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I introduce this bill by request. I know nothing of the merits of the bill, and am not committed in favor of or against it by its introduction. I move its reference, with the accompanying paper, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 882) for the relief of Isaac A. Hedges; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 883) for the relief of the widow of John Waters, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 884) to amend section 2441 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 53) referring to the Court of Claims a claim against the United States for the loss of the schooner Bergen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. BECK. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution, and I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing the payment of the salaries of the employés of Congress on the 19th of December, 1879; which was read the first time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read the second time at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to pay the employés of the two Houses of Congress on Friday, the 19th instant, for the month of December.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the joint resolution be passed at this time, because our financial clerk advises me that he cannot pay any of these employés until the 1st of January unless this is done. Many of them desire to go home during the recess. He has stated this to me as the reason why it should be done.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. ROLLINS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Mary W. Jones be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

NEGRO EMIGRATION TO NORTHERN STATES.

Mr. WINDOM. I was very much gratified yesterday when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] offered a resolution appointing a committee of five to make inquiry as to the causes of the exodus from the Southern States. It was gratifying to me for several reasons. I have long wondered why the honorable Senator from Indiana, with his known sympathy for the oppressed and suffering of all countries, has failed to speak in their behalf, and when I ascertained yesterday from his resolution that at last the sufferings of that people, which have driven many of them from their homes, have moved upon the sympathies of that honorable Senator, I felt that light was dawning upon that subject.

The resolution, however, was not quite so explicit or so practical as I desire it to be, and therefore my purpose in rising now is to offer an additional resolution by way of amendment to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution:

And be it further resolved, That in case said committee shall find that said exodus of colored citizens from the South has been caused by cruel and unjust treatment, or by the denial or abridgment of personal or political rights, they shall further inquire and report to the Senate: First, what, if any, action of Congress may be necessary to secure to every citizen of the United States the full and free enjoyment of all rights guaranteed by the Constitution; second, whether the peaceful adjustment of all sectional issues may not be best secured by the distribution of the colored race, through their partial migration from those States and congressional districts where, by reason of their numerical majority, they are not allowed to freely and peacefully exercise the rights of citizenship; and third, that said committee inquire and report as to the expediency and practicability of providing such territory or territories as may be necessary for the use and occupation of persons who may desire to emigrate from their present homes in order to secure the free, full, and peaceful enjoyment of their constitutional rights and privileges.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the amendment be printed and ordered to lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire whether any changes have been made or proposed in the plan originally provided for the north front of the State, War, and Navy Department building, and, if any changes have been so made or proposed, by what authority and the reasons therefor.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 3,000 sets of the five volumes of the Reports of the United States Fish Commission be printed from the stereotype plates, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

LOSS ON SPIRITS FOR EXPORTATION.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I will merely say——

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Delaware will allow the communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be read.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly. I send the communication to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, May 22, 1879.

SIR: I have your note of this date, asking for suggestions in regard to the propriety of passing House bill No. 1955, authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouse for exportation.

In reply, I have to state that in my opinion it would be eminently wise and just to pass this bill allowing for leakage or loss by unavoidable accident, and without any fraud or negligence of the distiller, owner, exporter, carrier, or their agents or employés, occurring during transportation from distillery warehouses to the port of export of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation.

It is certainly a great hardship on the exporter of alcohol to be required to pay ninety cents per gallon tax upon spirits which have leaked or been lost by unavoidable accident while the same were being transported from the place of manufacture to the port of export. The existing law expressly provides that spirits shall be withdrawn from the distillery warehouse without the payment of the tax, but other provisions of the law require a regauge of the spirits at the port of export, and assessments made for deficiencies. Where this deficiency results from fraud or negligence, the tax should be paid, but if it is simply an incident of transportation the exporter should not be required to pay the tax.

The exportation of alcohol has become a business of great proportions, and in my opinion American distillers will be able to very largely extend this business, and it seems to me proper to give them the encouragement that this proposed act affords. In regard to that provision of the bill which relieves from assessments from the 1st of May, 1878, I would say that it is a question addressed entirely to the wisdom of Congress, and if passed in its present shape would have the effect of relieving distillers from assessments for losses from which they obtained no advantage, and for spirits that never actually went upon the market. The second section of the bill seems to be entirely proper, so as to have whatever insurance may be obtained upon the taxes upon the spirits to inure to the benefit of the Government.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

HON. THOMAS F. BAYARD,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS FOR MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. I move to take up Senate bill No. 765, reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 765) to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, in line 8 of section 1, after the word "located" to insert "the application for patent and;" so as to make the bill read:

That section 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding thereto the following words: "Provided, That where the claimant for a patent is not a resident of or within the land district wherein the vein, lode, ledge, or deposit sought to be patented is located, the application for patent and the affidavits required to be made in this section by the claimant for such patent may be made by his, her, or its authorized agent, where said agent is conversant with the facts sought to be established by said affidavits: And provided, That this section shall apply to all applications now pending for patents to mineral lands."

SEC. 2. That section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding the following words: "Provided, That the period within which the work required to be done annually on all unpatented mineral claims shall commence on the 1st day of January succeeding the date of location of such claim, and this section shall apply to all claims located since the 10th day of May, A. D. 1872."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TELEGRAPH CABLE IN RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 819) to authorize the laying of a telegraphic cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $15,000 for the purpose of laying a telegraphic cable, under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, from the mainland of Rhode Island to Block Island, Rhode Island.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF ANIMALS.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask to take from the Calendar the bill (S. No. 206) relative to the transportation of animals. I call it up for the purpose of making it a special order for another day, not with a view to have it considered to-day. I desire to have it made the special order for January 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey desires that the bill named by him be made a special order for the 7th day of January, immediately after the morning hour, to which the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. As many amendments were made to the bill at the extra session, I move that the bill be printed, with the amendments, in order that the Senate may plainly understand the action of the body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be done under the rule.

MILITARY STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Mr. MAXEY. I now ask that Senate bill No. 744, the unfinished business of yesterday, be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 744) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senate had proceeded yesterday so far in the consideration of this bill as to hear the report of the committee read, and some remarks made by myself as having reported the bill on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, and by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] and also the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] The purpose and design of the bill, as I stated yesterday, is to remove what is regarded by some as an ambiguity in the law in respect to deserters; that is to say, whether article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War, which article is a part of section 1342 of the statute, applies to deserters. That article reads:

No person shall be liable to be tried and punished by a general court-martial for any offense which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial, unless, by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment, he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period.

If that article had been submitted to me for opinion, without any information on my part as to its construction, I would have concluded that the expression "for any offense" was sufficiently broad to have covered the case, and that a deserter could avail himself of the lapse of two years the same as any other offender; that the expression "by reason of having absented himself" had no application, so that it would not prevent the deserter from using the plea in bar; that the words "manifest impediment" referred, as the words would intimate, to some impediment to a trial in its nature manifest, as, for example, that the accused was in custody by virtue of a legal sentence of a court of competent jurisdiction, civil or military, whereby the power of the court-martial to proceed in the trial would not exist. That would be my construction of that language. Take a case where a man is insane and the trial could not be had, or where it would be manifest inhumanity to try him; that would be my view of a manifest impediment. The legal authorities, I believe, have in the main held that the two years' limitation does apply; but the military authorities have held that it does not. Hence, by reason of this ambiguity men are tried who have committed the crime of desertion a great many years ago, far more than two years; and if it be an ambiguity which causes this to be done, then it is the policy of the law-makers of the Government, it seems to me, to remove that ambiguity. That is the object of the bill.

The Senator from Vermont suggested some amendments. I will say to that Senator, for whose legal opinion I have the highest respect, that I care not what amendment he adds so far as I am personally concerned, so that the great purpose of the bill is maintained, which is that a man after the lapse of three years shall not be tried for the crime of desertion. It was submitted by the Senator that perhaps those who were guilty of frauds upon the Government by embezzlement or otherwise might avail themselves of this provision. To that I would reply that in my judgment article 60 of the Rules and Articles of War was designed and intended to cover that class of cases and to place those who embezzled or committed other frauds upon the Government on the same footing as any other trustee. If, however, the Senator believes this bill should be guarded on that point, I say all right, because I am as much opposed as the Senator or anybody else to allowing embezzlers to go scot free. All I desire is that the bill should be clearly and well guarded so as to prevent the military authorities from trying a man for the crime of desertion after the lapse of three years.

In support of what I have heretofore said, I will submit to the Senate some remarks on the subject made by the Judge-Advocate-General in his annual report for the present year directly bearing upon it. He being the officer particularly charged with the law matters connected with the Army, his opinion it occurs to me ought to be entitled to great weight. I ask the Secretary to read what I have marked from the foot of page 4 to the mark on page 6, so as to let the Senate see what that officer thinks.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In connection with this report I desire again to call the attention of the Secretary of War to the amendment of the one hundred and third article of war, which has heretofore passed the Senate, but has failed to go through the House of Representatives, (though favorably reported by its Military Committee,) and the adoption of which, as settling a protracted controversy, is, in my judgment, imperatively called for.

The amended article, as accepted and passed by the Senate, is as follows:

"A bill to amend the one hundred and third article of war.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the one hundred and third of the Rules and Articles of War be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE 103. No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for any offense committed more than two years, or in case of desertion three years, before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he may meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation."

I scarcely need again remind the honorable Secretary of the singular anomaly dwelt upon by me in former reports, that while the prosecution of all other military crimes is admitted to be limited by the existing article to the period of two years therein prescribed, the crime of desertion has been heretofore held and treated by the majority of commanders in the Army to be practically unaffected by the limitation, so that a deserter may be brought to trial at any time after his offense, or, in other words, remain liable to arrest and punishment to the end of his life. Thus, under this doctrine and practice, a soldier of the war of 1812, who may have deserted and be still alive, may at any moment be apprehended, tried by court-martial, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, though by an exemplary and valuable life of more than half a century he may have atoned over and over for the dereliction of his youth. In other words, he remains under a liability from which a soldier guilty of mutiny or cowardice in battle, or a civilian guilty of manslaughter, robbery, rape, arson, or high treason, is exempt under the existing law of the land. "Statutes of limitation," as observed by the United States Supreme Court, "rest upon sound policy, and tend to the peace and welfare of society." Wharton remarks of them that they are "acts of amnesty and grace, to be liberally construed in favor of the defendant," and at the same time "checks imposed by the state itself to exact vigilant activity upon its subalterns." They are, indeed, found in all modern codes as the expression not merely of an enlightened humanity, but of sound sense and practical policy; and for our military laws to exclude from their application any particular class of offenders against military discipline would seem to be unworthy the dignity of the Government, as well as prejudicial to the interests of the military service in inducing a lack of promptness and energy in the arrest and punishment of guilty persons. It is well known to the Secretary of War that it has always been held by the Judge-Advocate-General, (my predecessor in office, as well as myself,) that the existing military statute of limitations—the article of war above mentioned, is a general statute, applying to desertion in the same manner and to the same extent as to all other military offenses, and that the same conclusion has been held and expressed by the honorable Attorney-General in three successive official opinions, and indeed publicly approved and adopted by the Secretary of War in a general order (No. 68) issued from the War Department in 1874. I do not propose, however, to contest here the opposite doctrine above referred to, but, in view of the fact that the same has been repeatedly pronounced against by the highest legal adviser of the Government, and of the fact that, while the construction of the article remains thus in conflict, the due administration of military law must be constantly embarrassed, and injustice and oppression be not unfrequently wrought in individual cases, I desire simply to urge that the grave existing complication and difficulty be fully and finally removed by legislation such as that already initiated. In his annual report of November 19, 1877, the present Secretary of War approved such legislation, and recommended its adoption by Congress. It is earnestly desired that this recommendation may be repeated. At present, indeed, when parties are brought to trial for desertions committed many years before, and sentenced, the President, upon the recommendation of the Judge-Advocate-General, in the majority of cases, intervenes, through the Secretary of War, and, by the exercise of the pardoning power, sets free the prisoner. But this fact, which forcibly illustrates the injustice and impolicy of such trials, shows also that the existing law or practice is most faulty in permitting the same to be had at all.

Mr. MAXEY. By turning to section 1043 of the Revised Statutes, that class of crimes punishable in courts of criminal jurisdiction will be found, the act originally passed on the 30th of April, 1790:

No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for treason or other capital offense, willful murder excepted, unless the indictment is found within three years next after such treason or capital offense is done or committed.

There it matters not what may be the character of the crime, willful murder only excepted, even for the high crime of treason, after the lapse of three years the party cannot be prosecuted. I ask any one who has ever thought of such matters if desertion is a higher crime than treason? And ought there not to be some reason and some harmony in the law? Why should a man because he belongs to the Army suffer for a less offense a higher penalty than one who is not in the Army shall suffer for a greater offense? There is no reason for it in my judgment.

It is known to those who have had much to do with soldiers that there are a great many cases of hardship where in time of service a man's wife, for example, is at the point of death and he wants to go to see her, the orders are imperative that he cannot, but he goes; or a boy desires to see his mother and he becomes so fastened in that desire that he cannot resist the temptation of going. Years may roll by, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, as the law is construed, and that man may have been a perfectly good citizen in all respects, and yet he is liable to be arrested, tried, and punished for desertion.

It seems to me that is unjust; it seems to me that the law waits until the evidence which a party had for proving his justification or his excuse, or at all events his mitigating circumstances, has passed away, and then springs upon him, and has him convicted and punished. It does not seem to me that that is right. All I desire, as I stated before, is that there should be some guard thrown against such trials.

Now, in reply to what the Senator from Vermont so well said yesterday, (and I recognize his strength as a lawyer,) that this bill as presented does not contain the expression "manifest impediment," let me say, that the bill as presented was most carefully weighed by the Military Committee, as set forth in the report; and our view was, that that expression "manifest impediment" might be used to defeat the very object we are now seeking to accomplish; and, as I stated, giving only some of what would be "manifest impediments," that language could not be construed to include desertion; and without that this other expression, "absenting himself," would not operate to prevent the bar of the limitation.

I am willing, having discharged, as I think, my whole duty in this matter, and having no feeling whatever except to do what I believe to be an act of justice, to have the bill amended as the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator may see proper. So far as I am personally concerned, I can offer no amendment, because I am acting for the committee; but I will make no opposition to any amendment which will protect the point sought to be accomplished, and reach embezzlers or anybody else who attempts to defraud the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Texas in respect to what he has said as to cases of desertion, about which this difference of opinion and difficulty and frequent injustice have occurred. As to the cases of embezzlement and other concealed crimes by officers in the Army, if I correctly understand the Senator, his opinion substantially concurs with mine that they ought not to escape at the end of two years if still in the service.

Mr. MAXEY. I so stated, and I think the case of The United States vs. Cook, in 17 Wallace, perhaps, would prevent them availing themselves of the statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If they have concealed that embezzlement or have concealed themselves from the reach of the military process, just as in the civil law (as distinguished from military law) in the crimes act of the United States the statute of limitations has always, or at least for a great many years, contained this saving clause now found in section 1045, that—

Nothing in the two preceding sections shall extend to any person fleeing from justice.

The two preceding sections are the limitation sections. So, then, in the civil administration of justice, if a person commits any crime and hides himself, flees from justice so that he cannot be apprehended by reasonable diligence, whether within the United States or without, so that it can be found as a fact that he was not to be got at because he had hidden, he cannot avail himself of the bar of the statute. It is peculiarly so, and would be much worse as it respects officers in the Army. The statutes expressly provide that no officer of the Army, except for desertion, shall be dismissed from the Army, except on a judgment of a court-martial. Very well; an officer of the Army, being a paymaster for instance, embezzles the money of the United States; he so covers up and falsifies his accounts that the fact is not discovered until more than two years, or whatever the limitation is, have elapsed, and it is then discovered. The officer says to the President of the United States, and to all his fellow-officers and to everybody else, "You cannot get me out of the Army for that offense; I will be a paymaster still; I will still take my official place in all processions; I will still disgrace the Army of the United States and mortify and disgrace everybody that is in it, as I form part of it, because I am perfectly secure; you did not find out in season that I had been stealing money for ten or fifteen years till it was too late to prosecute me." Of course that would be a scandal, a gross scandal. As the law now stands this provision of "manifest impediment" saves it in my opinion, and I have never heard any doubt that it did. In a very recent case of a paymaster, a very sad case—I will not mention the name because I do not wish to injure anybody's feelings, he has many friends and a family—the largest part of the offenses of embezzlement were committed much more than two years before the embezzlement was discovered and the order for the trial of the officer was issued. I believe it did happen in that case that there were two or three instances afterwards that would have brought him into limbo, but that was a mere accident.

Now, if I understand the Senator from Texas, he agrees that cases of that kind ought not to be allowed to slip out on the statute; but the case of desertion I entirely agree with him about. I propose, therefore, to meet his views and at the same time to save such cases as I have described of officers not deserters, to amend the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs so that the provision will read:

That the one hundred and third of the Rules and Articles of War be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following words:

No person—

Then I take the very words of the committee—

No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for desertion more than three years before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he may meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation.

That takes out from the existing one hundred and third article, what will then be the first clause of it, the case of desertion entirely, and puts it in a subsequent and separate paragraph by itself, so that if added to the one hundred and third Article of War the one hundred and third article will then contain two clauses; first, as to general offenses, fraud, and everything of that kind except desertion, and in that there will be preserved the exception as to the limitation of the manifest impediment to bring the person to trial. Then comes the separate and special provision as to desertion, which does not contain any exception whatever except the one that the committee recommend—absence from the United States.

I move to strike out, in lines 4 and 5, all after the word "amended," and then in line 6 to strike out the words "article 103," and in lines 7 and 8 to strike out the words "any offense committed more than two years, or in case of." So that the expressive part of the paragraph will be added to 103 as a separate paragraph:

No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for desertion more than three years before the arraignment of such person for such offense, &c.

I think that will entirely cover the case of desertion and make the bill safe as it respects the other offenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let the section be read as it will stand if amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the one hundred and third of the Rules and Articles of War be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following words:

No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for desertion more than three years before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he may meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation.

Mr. MAXEY. As I understand the Senator from Vermont, and I agree that his idea is a very correct one, the article will read thus: Article 103, paragraph 1, will be just as it reads now; and then paragraph 2 will be that no person shall be tried or punished for desertion more than three years before arraignment, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That states it exactly.

Mr. MAXEY. Two paragraphs instead of one?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Vermont. I have examined with him this morning the concluding clause of the article relating to embezzlement, which is article 60:

Any person in the military service of the United States who makes or causes to be made any claim against the United States, or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or

Who presents or causes to be presented to any person in the civil or military service thereof, for approval or payment, any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or

Who enters into any agreement or conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the allowance or payment of any false or fraudulent claim; or

Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States, or against any officer thereof, makes or uses, or procures or advises the making or use of, any writing or other paper, knowing the same to contain any false or fraudulent statement; or

Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, makes, or procures or advises the making of, any oath to any fact or to any writing or other paper, knowing such oath to be false; or

Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, forges or counterfeits, or procures or advises the forging or counterfeiting of, any signature upon any writing or other paper, or uses, or procures or advises the use of, any such signature, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited; or

Who, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the military service thereof, knowingly delivers, or causes to be delivered, to any persons having authority to receive the same, any amount thereof less than that for which he receives a certificate or receipt; or

Who, being authorized to make or deliver any paper certifying the receipt of any property of the United States, furnished or intended for the military service thereof, makes, or delivers to any person, such writing, without having full knowledge of the truth of the statements therein contained, and with intent to defraud the United States; or

Who steals, embezzles, knowingly and willfully misappropriates, applies to his own use or benefit, or wrongfully or knowingly sells or disposes of any ordnance, arms, equipments, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, money, or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the military service thereof; or

Who knowingly purchases or receives in pledge for any obligation or indebtedness from any soldier, officer, or other person who is a part of or employed in said forces or service, any ordnance, arms, equipments, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, or other property of the United States, such soldier, officer, or other person, not having lawful right to sell or pledge the same, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge. And if any person, being guilty of any of the offenses aforesaid while in the military service of the United States, receives his discharge, or is dismissed from the service, he shall continue to be liable to be arrested and held for trial and sentence by a court-martial in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had not received such discharge nor been dismissed.

I desire to suggest to the Senator that if that does not except fiduciaries out of the operation of the statute of limitations it would be well to amend it so that it would.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My impression is that the only effect of that clause which the Senator has read is to make an embezzler—it is not necessary to go over the whole list—who has left the service just as much liable to prosecution as if he had not left it, and if he had not left it the statute of limitations would have run in his favor. Then having left it will not prevent the statute from running. That I think is the true construction of it. It seems to say so. The only thing is that if in cases of this kind any of these people shall have left the service of the United States, they shall nevertheless continue to be liable to be arrested and held by a court-martial in the same manner and to the same extent as if they had not received the discharge or had not been dismissed; but the case of the embezzler I think is saved, as has I believe always been held, by the provision in the one hundred and third article, which is the only limitation provision at all, the exception there which speaks of a case of "manifest impediment." If a man embezzles and it is known and he is within reach, has not concealed himself, and the Government of the United States choose to forgive that offense and let the two years go by without doing anything about it, it raises a very strong presumption that they thought in case of a trial he would have been able to vindicate himself, and therefore there is presumably no embezzlement at all; but in case his embezzlement has been concealed as in the instance I referred to—and there are not a great many others, for fortunately for the Army it very rarely has such cases—or if he has concealed himself, then there comes in the case of "manifest impediment," just analogous to the provision in the civil crimes act against fleeing from justice in that respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to have the whole article read as it will be if amended as suggested by the Senator from Vermont. Then the Senate will understand what we are voting on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, let article 103 be read and then my amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

103. No person shall be liable to be tried and punished by a general court-martial for any offense which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial, unless, by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment, he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the article as it stands; and to the matter just read the Senator from Vermont proposes to add what will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for desertion more than three years before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he may meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation.

Mr. MAXEY. That makes it appear right. One follows the other. I desire to state on the question of limitation that I have construed the purpose of article 60 to be to prevent any military person who defrauded the Government while in its employment from availing himself of the statute of limitations. The bill as we have it now accomplishes all the objects I had in view, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at one o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 16, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

SHIP-BUILDING AND MANUFACTURING.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, before the Journal is approved I desire to call attention to the reference of the bill (H. R. No. 2824) for the encouragement of American ship-building and American manufacturing. This bill, as appears on page 6 of the RECORD, was referred yesterday to the Committee on Commerce. It seems to me it clearly belongs to the Committee on Manufactures. The bill certainly relates primarily to manufactures, and only secondarily to commerce.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman calls attention was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. MORSE.] It has relation to ship-building, and, in the view of the Chair, belongs properly to the Committee on Commerce. At any rate, the point which the gentleman raises is not within the scope of a correction. The time to have resisted the reference of the bill to the Committee on Commerce was when it was introduced. It was undoubtedly referred to the Committee on Commerce; and therefore no question of the correction of the Journal arises. If there be no objection, the Journal will be approved.

There being no objection, the Journal was approved.

EDWARD GALLAHER.

Mr. STEPHENS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3012) for the relief of Edward Gallaher; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

INTEROCEANIC SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That a select committee of eleven members be hereby appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine into the subject of the selection of a suitable route for the construction of an interoceanic ship-canal across the American isthmus; that all petitions, memorials, resolutions, bills, and reports on such canal or other mode of facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, be referred to this committee, and that they have authority to report to this House, at any time, such legislation as may be best adapted to secure such communication between said oceans.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. KING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions on the resolution of the House of the 9th instant, for action at this time.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If there be objection, I shall insist on the regular order of business.

Mr. BREWER. I demand the regular order of business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being demanded, the morning hour now begins at twelve o'clock and fifty-four minutes p. m.; and reports of committees of a public character are in order, the call resting with the Committee on Public Lands.

LAND OFFICE, MONTANA.

Mr. CONVERSE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1336) for the establishment of a land office in the Territory of Montana, with amendments.

The bill was read. The first section provides that all that portion of the Territory of Montana which lies east of the one hundred and eighth parallel, which is not now or hereafter may be included in any Indian reservation, be, and the same is hereby, designated as the district of the Yellowstone, and constituted a separate land district, with a United States land office at such place as the President may designate within said district.

The second section provides that the President shall appoint a register and a receiver for said office, who shall be entitled to such compensation as is now provided by law, which compensation shall be paid from the fund appropriated for such purposes.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4, strike out the words "one hundred and eighth parallel" and in lieu thereof insert "twenty-seventh range east of the principal meridian."

In lines 8 and 9, strike out "at such place as the President may designate" and in lieu thereof insert "Miles City."

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred H. R. No. 1336, "for the establishment of a land office in the Territory of Montana," have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report the following amendments:

In section 1, line 4, strike out the words "one hundred and eighth parallel" and insert "twenty-seventh range east of the principal meridian."

In section 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "such place as the President may designate" and insert the words "Miles City."

With these amendments your committee recommend the engrossment and passage of the bill.

Your committee finds that in the county of Custer alone there have been 438,000 acres of public lands surveyed, which are now subject to entry. Miles City is four hundred and forty-eight miles from the present land office to which the lands of Custer County are attached. The settlers usually are obliged to visit the land office before locating, in order to ascertain what lands are subject to entry. The numerous failures of business men in the States, the scarcity of remunerative labor, and the consequent suffering among all classes in the States have caused vast numbers of citizens to seek homes in the far West, and thus an immense tide of emigration is setting in toward the Territories. During the last fiscal year less than nine hundred thousand acres of the public lands were taken under homestead, pre-emption, and cash entries. During the present fiscal year more than three million acres have been taken.

It is a great hardship for such a multitude of citizens, who are seeking homes in the wilderness, to travel so far to a land office after they have found a suitable place in which to pitch their tents and make a habitation and a home for themselves and their families.

Your committee are of opinion that it is the duty, as it has been heretofore the policy, of the Government to render every possible assistance to this class of citizens. The settler is not only obliged to go to the land office to ascertain what lands are subject to entry before he makes his selection, but in case of dispute between settlers about lands, and in all cases of contest, that long journey is to be undertaken. Four hundred miles in a settled country, when there are good roads, and even when there are railroad facilities, is no small undertaking for men in their circumstances; it is much worse in the wilderness. The honorable Commissioner of the Land Office recommends the new land district, with an office at Miles City, and your committee earnestly join in the recommendation.

Mr. CONVERSE. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CONVERSE. I yield now five minutes of the hour allotted to me under the rules to the Delegate from the Territory of Montana.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, the very complete report of the committee covers all the points in the case, and as I do not want to unnecessarily occupy the time of the House, I content myself with urging the necessity for the establishment of this office for a new land district which will be as large as an ordinary State, which I have been endeavoring to accomplish for some time. The amendments of the committee are proper, and should be adopted.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAKOTA LAND-OFFICE DISTRICT.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1307) to establish a land district in the Territory of Dakota, and locating the office at Grand Forks.

The bill was read. The first section provides that all that portion of the Territory of Dakota lying and being north of the twelfth standard parallel and east of the eleventh guide meridian shall constitute a new land district, to be known as the Grand Forks district.

The second section provides that the President is hereby authorized to appoint, in the manner provided by law, a register and a receiver for said district, who shall be required to reside in Grand Forks, in the county of Grand Forks, until such time as the President may, in his discretion, remove the site of said land office from said Grand Forks; and said register and said receiver shall be subject to the same laws and entitled to the same compensation as is or may be provided by law in relation to existing land offices and officers in said Territory.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5, section 1, strike out "eleventh" and in lieu thereof insert "tenth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1846) relating to the public lands of the United States with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. The first section provides that when any lands of the United States shall have been entered, and the Government price paid therefor in full, no suit or proceeding, civil or criminal, by or in the name of the United States, shall thereafter be had or further maintained for any trespasses upon, or for or on account of any material taken from, said lands, or on account of any alleged conspiracy in relation thereto, prior to the approval of this act: provided, the defendants in such suits or proceedings begun before such full payment shall exhibit to the proper court or officer the evidence of such entry and payment, and shall pay all costs accrued up to the time of such payment.

The second section provides that persons who have heretofore, under any of the homestead laws, entered lands properly subject to such entry, or persons to whom the rights of those having so entered for homesteads may have been attempted to be transferred by bona fide instrument in writing, may entitle themselves to said lands by paying therefor $1.25 per acre, and the amount heretofore paid the Government upon said lands shall be taken as part payment of said price: provided, this shall in no wise interfere with the rights or claims of others who may have subsequently entered such lands under the homestead laws.

The third section provides that the price of lands now subject to entry which were raised to $2.50 per acre more than twenty years prior to the passage of this act by reason of the grant of alternate sections for railroad purposes is hereby reduced to $1.25.

The fourth section provides that this act shall not apply to any of the mineral lands of the United States; and no person who shall be prosecuted for or proceeded against on account of any trespasses committed or material taken from any of the public lands after the passage of this act shall be entitled to the benefit thereof.

Mr. DUNNELL. I inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether that bill is not subject to the point of order?

The SPEAKER. In what respect?

Mr. DUNNELL. It should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ACKLEN. Under section 4 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will indicate distinctly what portion of the bill is subject to the point of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have not the bill before me, and I am unable to refer to the clause; but it seems to me to be disposing of the public lands of the United States.

Mr. ACKLEN. The alternate sections, which are fixed by law at $2.50 per acre, are under the provisions of the fourth section of this bill to be disposed of at $1.25. I think that would subject it to Rule 110, requiring the bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. This bill undertakes to provide for the relinquishment of claims for damages where judgments have been obtained on the payment of costs, without reference to the payment of damages. That, of course, is disposing of the right of property, or the right of money perhaps, of the United States.

The SPEAKER. If there be in any respect relinquishment of right or title to any public lands, it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. Unmistakably the bill contemplates that very thing. It is really a settlement with those men who have been trespassing on the public lands, and there are very serious objections to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not in the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. The whole scope of the bill is simply to settle litigation now pending in the United States courts, and other suits which might be brought for trespass upon the public lands. The land which was valued at $2.50 per acre is now worth less than $1.25 per acre where the timber has been taken off of it. The pending proposition simply authorizes those who have been sued to pay for the land and the costs which have accrued in court, thus allowing the whole business of this litigation to drop.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Ohio one question. Does this part with any right or title of the United States to these lands?

Mr. CONVERSE. I understand it does.

The SPEAKER. Then it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. I should like to be heard a moment on the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move, then, that the bill be made the special order for to-morrow after the morning hour from day to day until disposed of, and shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio requires unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to be heard for a moment on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order has been decided. The Chair will listen, however, and if the gentleman from Alabama can assign sufficient reasons to show that the decision is not right, the Chair will change it.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to be heard for just a moment. It does not seem to me the bill is subject to the point of order. I understand the Chair to say that if the bill parts with the title to the lands of the United States or proposes to do so, then it is subject to the point of order. That is to say, in other words, if the bill disposes of any portion of the public domain, it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole. But it does not.

The SPEAKER. Then what is the object of passing the bill?

Mr. HERBERT. The object of passing the bill is to give to persons who desire to enter the public lands the means of doing so under the rules and regulations there laid down.

The SPEAKER. That is disposing of the lands of the United States.

Mr. HERBERT. With all deference to the Chair, I submit that that is not disposing of the lands of the United States; because the land is not disposed of until the persons to whom the privilege is given to buy the lands shall actually go forward and buy them. That is the difference. This bill makes no disposition of the public lands. Every foot of public land that belongs to the United States now will belong to the United States after the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE,] the chairman of the committee, stated distinctly that the bill did part with the right and title of the United States to certain lands; and on that statement the Chair decides the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Ohio concurs with me that I am correct. If the Chair will read the bill he will see it makes no disposition whatever of a foot of public land. It merely lays down rules and prescribes regulations under which lands can be purchased, and then it prescribes the effect of the purchase of the lands; that is all. All the land that belongs to the United States now will belong to it after the passage of the bill, and if persons do not see proper to go forward and enter lands under the bill all the land will continue to belong to the Government as it does now. I do not see how it can be contended for a moment that the bill disposes of the public lands. It does not part with any title that is in the United States.

Mr. PAGE. I submit to the Chair that a bill providing for the sale or disposition of the public lands is not subject to the rule.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it is because the rule speaks of "property" of the United States.

Mr. PAGE. A bill providing for the sale and disposition of the public lands is not such a disposition of the property of the United States as comes within the rule.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

112. All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property or requiring such appropriations to be made or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PAGE. Now, the Chair will see that this does not come under the rule at all. There is no money appropriated and no disposition made of the public lands. The bill simply provides the manner in which the public lands may be disposed of. It appropriates no money for that purpose.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to explain that when I answered the question addressed to me by the Speaker I merely wished to say that the bill provided that after the parties paid for the lands the lands should be theirs. The entry is made in pursuance of the law, and this bill does not dispose of one foot of land. It settles litigation and authorizes the entry to be made in pursuance of laws already on the statute-book.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I wish to inquire whether this bill attempts to settle any questions in relation to the rights of settlers on the Des Moines lands in Iowa now in litigation?

The SPEAKER. Does this bill give a title on the part of the United States to any lands now in litigation in the courts?

Mr. HERBERT. It does not. The bill can in no way come within the provisions of Rule 112. It does not touch appropriations of money. It does not make appropriations of money. It does not require appropriations to be made. It authorizes no payment out of appropriations already made. Nor does it in any manner part with any title whatever that the United States has to the lands belonging now to the Government.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will my friend from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will state my understanding of the object and purpose of the bill. In a given case the United States has a right of action against A B for trespass committed on the public property, that is for timber taken. Then the United States to that extent has money involved; but the party, in the mode and manner set out in this bill, can defeat, or in other words compromise the suit with the United States Government, and so much money is lost. Am I correct?

Mr. HERBERT. I will reply to that.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman from Alabama has spoken three or four times already on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has volition how long he will listen on the point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] says the Government of the United States has money in that land. I ask him as a lawyer if that is a correct proposition? The Government of the United States has nothing whatever except a mere right of action; only that and nothing more. This bill proposes simply a mode of settling these actions that are now pending and suits that may hereafter be brought in relation to trespasses committed prior to the time of the passage of this bill. That is all. The only rule that can apply is this Rule 112 which relates to appropriations solely. It is construed that, if the United States parts with any of its property, in that case——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the second section of the bill; and the Chair thinks the gentleman will not dispute the point.

The Clerk read the second section, as follows:

That persons who have heretofore under any of the homestead laws entered lands properly subject to such entry, or persons to whom the rights of those having so entered for homesteads, may have been attempted to be transferred by bona fide instrument in writing, may entitle themselves to said lands by paying therefor $1.25 per acre, and the amount heretofore paid the Government upon said lands shall be taken as part payment of said price: Provided, This shall in no wise interfere with the rights or claims of others who may have subsequently entered such lands under the homestead laws.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire to call attention to Rule 110, which says that "no motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House." Now, it is perfectly clear to me that the section which the Clerk has just read, and also section 3 of the bill, which proposes to reduce to $1.25 an acre land which is now subject to entry at $2.50, make this bill subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this is a proceeding touching the disposition of property of the United States, and rules that the bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

FORT RIPLEY RESERVATION.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to turn over to the Department of the Interior all of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, except the following described tracts of land designated in executive order dated August 2, A. D. 1875, to wit: The south half of the southwest quarter and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 6, lot 1, in section 5, the north half of section 7 and the north half of the southwest quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 7, and lot 1, in section 8, in township 131, of range 29.

SEC. 2. All the lands embraced in that part of said Fort Ripley reservation hereby required to be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior shall be subject to entry by actual settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws as minimum lands, of the rate of $1.25 per acre, from and after the passage of this act. The rights of all actual settlers entitled to the benefits of the pre-emption or homestead laws who now occupy said lands shall date from the day of their actual settlement thereon; and in perfecting their titles thereto under the homestead or pre-emption laws the time such settlers have occupied and improved their said lands shall be allowed.

SEC. 3. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands were as follows:

Add to section 1 of the bill the following:

And a strip or tract of land fifty feet in width from the center of the railroad track on each side of the said track of the Western Railroad Company of Minnesota, as the said track is located and constructed, being a distance of about fifteen miles across said reservation on the east side of the Mississippi, together with a tract of land fifteen hundred feet in length and three hundred feet in width for depot and station purposes at the present location of the Fort Ripley side track. the same being for right of way for said railroad as heretofore granted by acts of Congress in the years 1857 and 1865, and which is hereby granted for that purpose.

Also, add to section 2 the following:

Provided, That all persons who purchased and paid for any of said lands at the sale authorized by the War Department in 1857, and paid therefor the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, shall be entitled to patents for the same without further payments.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask that the Clerk now read the joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution asking Congress to pass an act authorizing the lands of the Fort Ripley reservation to be entered under the pre-emption and homestead laws.

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That whereas many persons have settled upon and opened farms on the military reservation of Fort Ripley in this State with the just expectation that they would be enabled to secure the title to said lands in the same manner as the titles are secured by settlers on other public lands of the United States; and

Whereas the said military reservation is no longer used by the Government of the United States for military purposes; and

Whereas the plan that is now being carried out, of appraising and selling said lands in accordance therewith, will do, if consummated, great injustice to all who have settled upon said lands: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to secure if possible the passage of an act by Congress authorizing the settlement of the lands of said reservation under the pre-emption and homestead laws, with full and complete protection for those who are at this time bona fide settlers thereon.

Approved March 1, 1878.

C. A. GILMAN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
J. B. WAKEFIELD.
President of the Senate.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Saint Paul, March 5, A. D. 1878.

I, J. S. Irgens, secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, hereby certify that the foregoing has been compared with the original on file in this office, and is a true copy.

Witness my hand and the great seal of the State the day and year above written.

[SEAL.] J. S. IRGENS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask also that the Clerk read the report of the sub-committee, together with the action of the full committee upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned sub-committee, to whom was referred House bill No. 1153, with reference to restoring to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, have had the same under consideration, and find that the tract of land referred to was reserved for this purpose in 1849; that, in point of fact, the portion of the reservation on the east side of the river, and included in the bill referred to, has never been used for military purposes or in connection with the military post, which is located on the west side of the Mississippi River, and not embraced in the provisions of this bill. As long ago as 1872, February 24, the Secretary of War, in a communication to the House of Representatives, named this reservation as one "proper to be abandoned" and to be disposed of without injury to the public service. By an act of Congress, approved February 28, 1873, provision was made for the sale of the land included in this reservation, and subsequently a commission was created to appraise the lands and the Secretary of War authorized to sell the same. A board of commissioners was appointed, but has done nothing in the premises.

During the long time that has intervened many settlers have gone upon the reservation and made improvements in the constant expectation that the lands would be in some way brought into market. Under the broad and liberal terms of the various pre-emption and homestead laws that have been enacted by Congress the entire public domain in the State of Minnesota, except certain military and Indian reservations, has been brought within the scope and operation of these enactments, and your committee see no good reason why the provisions of these acts should not apply to the lands embraced in this reservation, especially as the lands are not more valuable than the lands generally in Minnesota, except what value may have been added by the improvements of the settlers.

Your committee would therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the two amendments attached, to wit: one amendment granting right of way through said reservation to the Western Railroad Company of Minnesota, and the other providing for the issue of patents to such persons as have paid $1.25 per acre for any portion of said lands at the sale authorized by the War Department, in the year 1857.

W. D. WASHBURN,
THOS. WILLIAMS,
GEO. L. CONVERSE,
Sub-Committee.

DECEMBER 16, 1879.

The amendments reported from the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWAMP LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1737) confirming grants of swamp lands made by the State of Minnesota in aid of the construction of railroads and other internal improvements.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all grants of swamp lands heretofore, or which may hereafter be, made by the State of Minnesota, in the aid of the construction of railroads and other internal improvements, of lands granted to said State by the act of Congress entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits," approved September 28, 1850, and the act entitled "An act to extend the provisions of an act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits to Minnesota and Oregon, and for other purposes," approved March 12, A. D. 1860, be, and the said several grants heretofore or hereafter made by said State of Minnesota are, legalized and confirmed.

SEC. 2. This act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask that the memorial of the State Legislature of Minnesota upon this subject be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the members of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, respectfully represent that doubts exist as to the validity of certain grants made by the Legislature of this State in aid of the construction of railroads of a portion of the swamp lands granted by Congress to the State for the purposes of internal improvement. These legislative acts have been made in good faith, in the full belief that the appropriation of a portion of such lands are a legitimate exercise of the power of disposition, and that a grant of such swamp lands in aid of railroad construction, thereby opening up the State for settlement, developing its resources by the construction of these necessary public improvements, were consistent with the provisions of the grant by Congress and a legitimate execution of the trust; that on the faith of these grants to the several railroad companies these companies have sold portions of said lands to actual settlers, who have paid for and improved the same. The companies have in like good faith mortgaged the lands so granted and not sold, and have realized and expended in the construction of their several lines of road millions of dollars which have been advanced by the purchase of such lands in like good faith, the expenditure of which has secured the construction of hundreds of miles of railroads.

Your memorialists therefore pray that an act of Congress be passed confirming said grant; and we further ask such enactment by your honorable body as will enable the Legislature of this State to make such further disposal of said lands as may by such Legislature be deemed expedient in extending aid to works of internal improvement.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Approved March 10, 1879.

C. A. GILMAN,
Speaker of the House of Representatiees.
J. B. WAKEFIELD,
President of the Senate.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Saint Paul, March 22, 1879.

I, J. S. Irgens, secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, hereby certify that the foregoing has been compared with the original on file in this office and is a true copy.

Witness my hand and the great seal of the State the day and year above written.

[SEAL.] J. S. IRGENS,
Secretary of State.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. COX. Does this bill propose in any way to change the original grant by Congress?

Mr. WASHBURN. It does not.

Mr. COX. There is no change in the original grant, and it leaves the State to apply the proceeds as it pleases?

Mr. WASHBURN. That is correct. All these lands have been granted by the State to railroad companies, and much of them have been sold by those companies to actual settlers.

Mr. COX. Have any of these grants expired as to time?

Mr. WASHBURN. They have not.

Mr. COX. There is no limitation on them?

Mr. WASHBURN. None whatever.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY RESERVATIONS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, be, and the same are hereby, abolished, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands.

The amendment reported by the committee was to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That the rights of all actual settlers entitled to the benefits of the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States, who now occupy in good faith any portion of the land embraced within any of said reservations, shall date from the day of their actual settlement thereon; and in perfecting their titles thereto under the homestead or pre-emption laws, the time such settlers have occupied and improved their said lands shall be allowed: Provided, further, That when the lands embraced in said reservations shall be surveyed the claims of all such actual settlers shall be made to conform to the lines of the Government surveys.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman one question: whether upon any of these lands there have been any entries under the tree-culture act?

Mr. BENNETT. I think not. There have been no entries on these lands at all.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AID TO ACTUAL SETTLERS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back without recommendation, for the consideration of the House, the bill (H. R. No. 269) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862. Without calling for the reading of the bill I ask that it may be fixed as a special order for the 15th of January next.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the right to make a point of order on the bill; but in the mean time I call for the reading of the report, if there is one accompanying the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not ask for the consideration of the bill. It may go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. From what committee is the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. From the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER. If the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole the report will be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask is there a report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. CONGER. Does the committee report the bill favorably?

The SPEAKER. The bill is reported back without recommendation.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] moves that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. It does not need any motion, if the point is good.

The SPEAKER. The point is good, as the Chair supposes. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

USE OF THE MAILS BY LOTTERY COMPANIES, ETC.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to furnish to the House, if not incompatible with public interests, such evidence and information as the files and records of his Department may contain respecting the extent to which lottery companies or agents make use of the mails for the conduct and circulation of their correspondence and the extent to which the mails are used for the purpose of reply, the methods they employ, and the means taken by the Department to enforce the present statutes against the use of the mails by such companies or agents.

Mr. MONEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SCHEDULES ON MAIL-ROUTES.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2078, a bill (H. R. No. 3013) to provide for regulating the manner of increasing service and expediting schedules on mail-routes; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that it be made a special order for the third Thursday of January next, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. After the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. With the qualification suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] the Chair hears no objection to making the order proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY.] The order will be made.

DELIVERY OF LETTERS.

Mr. MONEY, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1533, a bill (H. R. No. 3014) to facilitate the delivery of letters, and the speedy return to the writers thereof of such as are refused or cannot be delivered; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that this bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in order to facilitate the delivery of letters, and the speedy return to the writers thereof of such as are refused or cannot be delivered, the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and empowered to establish such post-offices as return-letter offices as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act, and to prescribe such rules and regulations for the government and management of said return-letter offices as he, in his judgment, may deem proper and necessary.

Mr. DIBRELL. I raise the point of order that this bill involves an expenditure of money, and must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MONEY. On the contrary, I think this is a measure of economy.

The SPEAKER. The committee report a substitute, which they propose to have passed instead of the original bill. Perhaps the substitute had better be read.

Mr. DIBRELL. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. DIBRELL. I make that point.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; the bill goes over.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour may be continued, so that the committee may get rid of matters they have on hand.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORNEY. I give notice that I shall call this bill up for consideration to-morrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 744) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War;

An act (S. No. 765) to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands;

An act (S. No. 819) to authorize the laying of a telegraphic cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island;

An act (S. No. 837) to donate twelve condemned bronze cannon to the Blair Monument Association of Saint Louis, Missouri; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing the payment of the salaries of the employés of Congress on the 19th of December, 1879.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FINLEY. I moved a few moments ago that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, but I yield for a moment to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.]

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UTE INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs and put on its passage a joint resolution (S. R. No. 51) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado and their removal and settlement elsewhere.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through a commission of five persons to be appointed by the President, or by direct negotiation, as he may deem best, to enter into an agreement with such of the Ute Indians in Colorado as have not by acts of hostility against the United States or otherwise forfeited their rights under existing treaties for the extinguishment of their title to their reservation in said State, and for their removal and settlement in some suitable place not in the Indian Territory; and the said Secretary of the Interior shall report his proceedings under this resolution to Congress for its consideration and approval; the expense of such negotiation to be paid by the United States, for which purpose the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SCALES. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object.

ARSENAL PROPERTY, CHARLESTON.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask, Mr. Speaker, for unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs Senate joint resolution No. 26, to transfer the arsenal property in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute, for the use and accommodation of said school.

Mr. FINLEY. I will yield if it does not take much time.

Mr. DIBRELL. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution, which was read, is as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to lease and deliver possession, upon such terms and conditions as to him may seem best, for the use of or in the interest of the Government, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute, the property known as the "Arsenal," situated in the city of Charleston, State of South Carolina, together with all the buildings, rights, and appurtenances thereto belonging, to be had and held by said trustees for the use and accommodation of said school for such time as said lease may run, if not theretofore required by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such terms and arrangements with said trustees for the care and protection of said property during its occupancy by said school, and for the redelivery of possession to the Government when thereto required, as will best subserve the interests of the Government: Provided, That the Government shall not be required to pay for any improvements that may be placed on said grounds during the continuance of said lease.

Mr. BREWER. Is not that bill subject to a point of order?

Mr. DIBRELL. It is a joint resolution which passed the Senate unanimously and was passed by the Military Committee of this House unanimously. It is not subject to a point of order. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. BREWER. There is no appropriation; but it does relinquish our right to the possession of this property.

Mr. DIBRELL. It does not; but, on the contrary, authorizes the Secretary of War to take possession whenever the Government needs it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. BREWER. I do. We yield the possession of that property to some sectarian school.

Mr. EVINS. The school is not sectarian.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution goes to the Committee of the Whole. It transfers the property of the United States at the arsenal, temporarily, it is true, but still parts with what may be called the rental.

Mr. EVINS. It simply authorizes the Secretary of War to make a lease on such terms as he may deem fair.

The SPEAKER. It certainly transfers to others than officers of the United States certain property of the United States.

Mr. DIBRELL. I withdraw the joint resolution, and give notice that I shall report it at some future time.

BUSINESS UPON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. FINLEY. I now insist on my motion, that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 35.

Mr. FINLEY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FINLEY and Mr. RUSSELL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 26, noes 40.

So the motion was rejected.

UTE INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] withdraws his objection to the report which I asked to submit a few minutes ago from the Committee on Indian Affairs. If there be no further objection I ask now to report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs Senate joint resolution No. 51, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado and their removal and settlement elsewhere.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve my right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes and empowers the Secretary of the Interior, through a commission of five persons to be appointed by the President, or by direct negotiation, as he may deem best, to enter into an agreement with such of the Ute Indians in Colorado as have not, by acts of hostility against the Government of the United States, or otherwise, forfeited their rights under existing treaties, for the extinguishment of their title to their reservation in said State, and to obtain their consent for their removal and settlement in some suitable place not in the Indian Territory; and the said Secretary of the Interior shall report his proceedings under this resolution to Congress for its consideration and approval. The expense of such negotiation to be paid by the United States, for which purpose the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SCALES. I ask that the amendment reported from the committee be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "to" in line 9 to the word "and" in line 12, and in lieu thereof insert "so much of their reservation in said State as may be deemed desirable or necessary in the judgment of said commission or Secretary of the Interior, and for their removal and settlement in some suitable place in the State of Colorado: Provided, That said commission or the Secretary of the Interior, in any agreement made with the said tribe of Utes for the cession of any part of their reservation in Colorado, shall obtain, before said cession shall be valid, the consent of said Ute tribe of Indians, as provided in section 16 of the treaty made at the city of Washington, on the 2d day of March, 1868, between the Government of the United States and said tribe of Ute Indians: And provided, That no agreement made with said tribe of Indians shall be valid unless agreed to by three-fourths of all the adult male Indians who have not forfeited their treaty rights, as aforesaid, occupying or interested in the same: And provided, That Congress shall confirm said cession."

Mr. MILLS. I ask whether that amendment is acceptable to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. BELFORD. It is not.

Mr. MILLS. Then I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CONGER. Was not the point of order made on this before?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserved the right to object, and he does now object to the reception of the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. MILLS. I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. BELFORD. I should like to see some disposition made of this question before we take a recess for the Christmas holidays.

Mr. SCALES. The representatives of these Ute Indians are now on their way to this Capitol, and it is important whatever is to be done should be done during the holidays. The Committee on Indian Affairs have been in a hurry to get this report ready for action. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection that we may do what we can in that way to settle the difficulty between these Indians and the whites.

Mr. COX. I suggest to my friend from North Carolina that he fix some hour to-morrow for the consideration of this joint resolution.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to that if the House will take it up.

Mr. COX. There are other people interested in this difficulty with the Indians besides those on the border and those interested in emigration in this Capitol, whether from North Carolina or the West.

Mr. SCALES. I will state to my friend from New York that this does not raise that question at all. This is only the question of appointing a commission. The question as to how the troubles originated there will come up under another resolution.

Mr. COX. I hope my friend will give us a chance to read it up over night. I will try to help him in all laudable efforts in this Indian business.

Mr. SCALES. If there is no objection, I am willing to say to-morrow after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has objected, and the report is not before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there objection to making this a special order after the morning hour?

Mr. BUCKNER. The Committee on Appropriations have that now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects to the reception of the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there objection to the committee reporting it at a future time by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. That can be done, of course. The gentleman from Texas insists upon his objection, and the report is not before the House.

QUARANTINE HOSPITAL, HAMPTON ROADS.

Mr. GOODE. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARFIELD. What do you want to get at?

Mr. GOODE. A bill to establish a quarantine hospital in Hampton Roads; a bill recommended by the National Board of Health and reported unanimously by the committee, and for which there is great necessity.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. When we get into Committee of the Whole I give notice I shall call up the judicial bill, which has been pending since the last session.

Mr. GOODE. I shall move to pass it by.

The SPEAKER. When the House gets into the committee it will be for the committee to determine what business it will take up.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask my colleague to yield to me to make a report.

Mr. GOODE. I decline to yield.

Mr. GOODE's motion was rejected.

ARTHUR P. RANDALL.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3016) granting a pension to Arthur P. Randall, of Tuscola, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

WILLIAM BRYANT.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3017) granting a pension to William Bryant; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3018) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. KING also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3019) to amend an act entitled "An act for the payment to the officers and soldiers of the Mexican war for the three months' extra pay provided for by the act of July 19, 1848;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. KING also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3020) to divide the State of Louisiana into two judicial districts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZA M. FRICK.

Mr. KLOTZ, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No.

3021) for the relief of Eliza M. Frick, widow of Captain Clarence H. Frick, deceased; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEGAL-TENDER ACT.

Mr. MORSE. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time for reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency a petition signed by Charles Francis Adams and 200 others, and I also ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. What is the subject of the petition?

Mr. MORSE. It is in reference to the legal-tender act.

Mr. CONGER. Let it go through the petition-box.

Mr. MORSE. I know that is the usual course for petitions; but I ask unanimous consent that the petition be read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. CONGER said: I withdraw my objection to reading the petition presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. MORSE.]

The petition was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the petition be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McKENZIE. I object.

PAYMENT OF EMPLOYÉS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HENRY. I ask that by unanimous consent the Senate joint resolution providing for the payment of employés of Congress be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing the payment of the salaries of the employés of Congress on the 19th of December, 1879, was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the employés of the two Houses of Congress on Friday, the 19th instant, for the month of December.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MATTER ACCUMULATED IN DOCUMENT-ROOM.

Mr. HENRY also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas there is at present in the Clerk's document-room of the House a large accumulation of bills, joint resolutions, and stitched documents printed by former Congresses, and not needed for the present or future use of that office, which occupy space much needed for other purposes, and which increase the liability to accident by fire: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House turn over at the Capitol to the superintendent of documents in the Interior Department such of said printed matter as that officer may be able to utilize and desire to receive, and any surplus thereafter remaining shall, under the direction of the Committee of Accounts, be disposed of by the Clerk as waste paper, and the net proceeds of the sale thereof, after paying expenses of sale, be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does that refer to papers in the folding-room or in the document-room?

Mr. HENRY. The Clerk's document-room.

The preamble and resolution were agreed to.

Mr. HENRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolution were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent that all bills referred to the Committee on Commerce which relate to the question of an interoceanic canal be referred to the new committee on that subject authorized to-day.

Mr. ACKLEN. I object.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask that the bill introduced by myself may be so referred—the bill (H. R. No. 2794) to provide for the appointment of an interoceanic commission to determine the best plan and route for the establishment of communication for trade and commerce between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans across the Isthmus of Darien.

Mr. ACKLEN. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. COX. I hope that all bills relating to that matter which have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs will also be referred to the select committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the proposition of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] was that all bills and papers relating to that subject which had been referred by the House to committees should now, since the establishment and authorization of a select committee having charge of the question, be referred to that committee. The gentleman from Louisiana, his colleague, [Mr. ACKLEN,] objected, but subsequently withdrew the objection.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman informed me it was only his own bill he desired to withdraw.

Mr. COX. There are some bills on the same subject before the Foreign Affairs Committee. I ask that all these bills shall go to the select committee.

Mr. ACKLEN. I must object. I have some bills of my own on that subject before the Committee on Commerce, and I do not desire to have them withdrawn from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that the effect of the order made to-day would be to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the consideration of all bills and papers relating to that subject, and to refer them to the select committee.

Mr. ACKLEN. Was that the action of the House?

The SPEAKER. The order was adopted by a vote of the House.

Mr. GIBSON. It is, then, the order of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is. The Chair will examine the language of the new order to see whether it does not, in fact, discharge the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Foreign Affairs from the consideration of that subject. The Chair thinks, as he recollects the language, that it is sufficiently comprehensive to do so; but the Chair prefers to examine the language more closely before giving a decision on that point.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3022) for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and to prevent the erosion of its banks between Islands No. 14 and 15, near the village of Kaskaskia, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT CAIRO.

Mr. THOMAS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3023) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital at Cairo, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PETER GALLAHER.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3024) for the relief of the heirs of Peter Gallaher; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EDMUND E. SCHREINER.

Mr. UPSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3025) for the relief of Edmund E. Schreiner; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask consent to report at this time from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws Senate joint resolution No. 19, to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes. The House will recollect that the revision of 1873 brings down the general laws of the United States to that period. The second revision of 1878 only brings down the laws of 1873 as they have been amended. All laws of a general nature, which are original and not in amendment of previous acts, are not embraced in the revision of 1878. Hence the reader is deceived; every lawyer who takes the second revision—that of 1878—thinks he has all of the original laws of the country, whereas most of the important laws passed between 1873 and 1878 are omitted from the second revision.

The Senate has passed a joint resolution providing for the publication of a supplement prepared by one of the judges of the Court of Claims of this District. It has been prepared with the very greatest possible care, with an index, copious references to past laws, and decisions of the courts on various subjects. It is a volume prepared by him during the discharge of his duties as judge of the Court of Claims. The Senate, being convinced of the importance of this volume to the country, has passed a resolution for the publication of the supplement, which the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of this House recommend with some slight amendments.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read; also the amendments reported from the committee, after which objections will be in order to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution provides that the supplement to the Revised Statutes, embracing all statutes general and permanent in their nature, passed after the Revised Statutes, with references connecting provisions on the same subject, explanatory notes, citations of judicial decisions, and a general index prepared by William A. Richardson, shall be stereotyped at the Government Printing Office; that 6,107 copies shall be printed, bound, and distributed as provided for the distribution of the Revised Statutes, by the joint resolution providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States passed May 22, 1878, and such additional copies on the orders of the Secretary of State as may be necessary from time to time, to be kept for sale in the same manner and on like terms as the Revised Statutes are required to be kept for sale, and to supply deficiencies and offices newly created.

The joint resolution further provides that for preparing and editing said supplement there shall be paid to said editor such compensation per copy as shall be fixed by the Secretary of State, not exceeding fifty cents for each copy printed from the stereotyped plates thereof, to be included in the sale price of copies kept for sale; and that to carry into effect the provisions of this joint resolution sufficient money is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws were as follows:

In line 8, after the words "Government Printing Office," amend so as to read: "and index and plates, and all right and title therein and thereto shall be in and fully belonging to the Government for its exclusive use and benefit."

In line 9 strike out "one" and insert "three," and between the words "and" and "seven" insert the word "fifty;" so as to provide for publishing 6,257 copies.

In line 14, after "1878," insert "and joint resolution passed December 21, 1878."

In line 20, after the word "supplement," insert "including indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete said work, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $3,500."

Strike out lines 21, 22, 23, and 24.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS,] before objection is waived, whether this joint resolution will authorize this compilation or print to be used as laws and statutes of the United States?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There is no provision of that sort at all. It is supplemental; there is no provision in this resolution to adopt this supplement as the law of the country.

Mr. KEIFER. There ought to be.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There ought not to be.

Mr. CONGER. Then this will be merely a publication of the laws of the United States by authority of Congress, which cannot be received in court as authority.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There will be no trouble, if it is published by the authority of Congress.

Mr. CONGER. It is publishing the compilation of a private individual, which will seem to be an authoritative copy of the laws.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. CONGER. I was making this proposition by way of inquiry.

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Why object?

Mr. COX. I can give some good reasons for it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think this bill should be considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the joint resolution is not before the House.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. McCOID. I ask consent of the House that Hon. John Y. Stone, ex-speaker of the house of representatives, Legislature of Iowa, be allowed the privileges of the floor for the next three days.

There was no objection.

CHARLES HEMING.

Mr. LAPHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3026) for the relief of Charles Heming, postmaster at Geneva, New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for reference to the Committee on Mines and Mining, the bill (S. No. 765) to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning mineral lands.

Mr. COX. What has become of the motion to adjourn, which I made about three-quarters of an hour ago?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as insisting upon it.

Mr. COX. I ask a vote on that motion.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were ayes 101, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

Before the result of the vote was announced the following business was transacted:

REPORT OF SOUTHERN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the ninth general report of the commissioners of claims; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

FORT BARRANCAS, FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to certain tenements adjacent to Fort Barrancas, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the report of the joint commission for the completion of the Washington Monument, for 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CLOTHING FOR SOLDIERS OF FIFTH CAVALRY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending the gratuitous issue of clothing to certain soldiers of the Fifth Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at two o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 17, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the joint commission for the completion of the Washington Monument, transmitting, in compliance with the act of Congress of August 2, 1876, creating the commission, the annual report of Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas L. Casey, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, engineer in charge of the construction of the monument, detailing the work done in the year ending November 30, 1879, a statement of the amount of money expended to date, and tracings exhibiting the work already accomplished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This communication, with the accompanying drawings, will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORRILL. Should it not be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question of printing, under the statute, must go to the Committee on Printing, and the lithographic drawings must be done under their superintendence. If they are ordered to be printed, when printed they will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ANTHONY subsequently, from the Committee on Printing, reported in favor of printing the document, with the engravings; and the report was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will now be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of J. T. Jackson and others, citizens of Maine, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Plantation No. 8, Piscataquis County, to Abbott Village in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of A. M. Holland and others, citizens of South Carolina, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Savannah River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of Hugh O'Neal, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a law continuing a pension granted to his wife on account of services rendered to the Government by their son; which, with the papers on the files of the Senate relating to the case, was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of Milton L. Spau, late second lieutenant Company K, Nineteenth Indiana Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURMAN. I present the petition of David Crouse and others, citizens of the State of Ohio, largely engaged in stock-raising, praying that Congress may create a commission, with national authority, to have charge of investigations of the nature and treatment of contagious diseases of domestic animals. These petitioners are among the largest, most respectable, and intelligent farmers of that State; and as the petition relates to a great subject and is very brief, I ask that it may be read, and then referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be read, no objection being heard.

The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned citizens of the State of Ohio, being interested in the great agricultural industry of the country, beg most respectfully to direct the attention of your honorable body to the imperative necessity that exists for the creation of a commission, under national authority, to have charge of the investigation of the nature and treatment of contagious diseases of domestic animals, and, with the concurrence and sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt and enforce such reasonable rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent the importation and dissemination of those diseases, as well as to eradicate such as may exist.

In view of the magnitude of the interest we represent and the importance and rapid growth of our live-stock export trade, now imperiled on account of the danger apprehended from this cause by our foreign customers, we most earnestly press upon the attention of our Senators and Representatives in Congress the fact that the necessity for immediate action is most urgent.

We suggest that the commission should consist of not less than three members—say a competent and experienced veterinary surgeon, a practical stock-grower, with an intelligent business man who is familiar with questions connected with commerce in live stock.

The well-known fact that these contagious diseases increase with the increase of domestic animals and the multiplication of facilities for their transportation, it seems obvious that the Government of the United States, representing a larger live-stock interest than that of any other nation in the world, should establish and maintain a permanent commission whose sole duty it shall be to have charge of this subject.

The Commissioner of Agriculture, as well as other heads of Departments at Washington, however competent they may be, would not be able to devote the time necessary for the proper discharge of these onerous duties. We therefore pray your honorable body for the enactment of a law providing for the appointment of such a commission, with an adequate appropriation for its support.

Mr. HEREFORD presented the petition of Henry Miller and others, surviving soldiers of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of F. Stanly, rear-admiral United States Navy, praying for the passage of a law granting him $150 arrears of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a resolution of the National Workingmen's Association, relative to the introduction of labor-saving machinery into the mechanical departments of Government work; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 74) authorizing Lieutenant Z. L. Tanner, of the United States Navy, late commanding Pacific mail steamer City of Peking, to accept a pair of flower vases and a lacquered box from the Japanese government, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 450) to establish a circuit court of the United States in and for the State of Texas, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CARPENTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 150) to provide for punishing persons who steal horses, mules, and other property from the Indians, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GARLAND. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the memorial of the Legislature of Nebraska in favor of legislation authorizing the removal of the Santee Sioux Indians from that State, and that the lands heretofore occupied by them be opened up for settlement and sale, with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, as it is a matter properly belonging to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I move that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I am also instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred two other petitions signed by individuals in reference to the same matter, to ask to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A like order will be made in reference to these petitions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 103) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffrey, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 22) for the relief of Theophilus P. Chandler, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOOTH. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, have directed me to report it without amendment, and I give notice that to-morrow morning I shall ask the Senate to consider it.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am instructed by the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census to report a bill, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, was read the first and second times.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should be glad to have the bill lie over. I propose myself to offer an amendment to the existing law in regard to the subject of the census, and would like to offer it on this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One objection takes the bill over.

Mr. PENDLETON. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I said that I myself thought of offering an amendment to the census bill, providing that something should be enumerated that I understand is not provided for.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. PENDLETON. The passage of this bill would not preclude any amendment of that kind hereafter.

Mr. CARPENTER. The bill ought to be printed. It is an important bill, and I object to its consideration until it is printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent, without previous notice, to introduce a bill looking to the repeal of all permanent annual or indefinite appropriations. There are some thirty or forty objects for which such appropriations are now made. There are probably a hundred such acts scattered through various acts passed at different times. I am glad to say that the Secretary of the Treasury, with whom I have had conversation, approves of the repeal of most of them, and probably all of them.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 886) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 887) to authorize printing at the Government Printing Office for members of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 888) to authorize the compilation and printing of the Naval History of the War; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 889) for the relief of William Webster; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 890) relating to the equitable and legal rights of parties in possession of certain lands and improvements thereon in California, and to provide jurisdiction to determine those rights; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. McPHERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 891) to locate and purchase a new site for the United States Naval Observatory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 892) to remove the political disabilities of William S. Maxwell, of Tennessee; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. I accompany the bill by a letter from the party stating the facts. I move the reference of the bill and accompanying letter to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 893) for the relief of Robert C. Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PADDOCK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 894) for the relief of certain employés of the United States courts for the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 895) to provide increased hospital facilities in the marine-hospital service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PADDOCK. At the proper time I shall ask that this be substituted for a bill recently introduced by me on the same subject. I have thought it best to make certain changes in the original bill to make it conform more nearly to the recommendation of the surgeon-general of the marine service; but the object sought to be accomplished is the same in both, and has the cordial approval of the surgeon-general. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 896) for the relief of Cyprian T. Jenkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 897) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 898) granting a pension to Mary A. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 899) granting a pension to William O. Morgan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EATON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 900) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FARLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 901) to establish a district court in and for certain counties in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 902) to authorize the restoration of Stephen O'Connor, second lieutenant Twenty-third Infantry, late first lieutenant Twenty-third Infantry, to the rank of first lieutenant United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution, which I wish to have read at length.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 54) to forfeit certain public lands granted to aid in the construction of certain railroads and telegraphic lines; which was read the first time, as follows:

Whereas Congress has heretofore granted to States and corporations to aid in the construction of railroads large grants of the public lands of the United States, amounting in the aggregate to more than a hundred million acres, much of it of the most valuable character remaining in the possession of the Government, and said States and corporations have failed to perform the conditions of their respective grants, and have failed or neglected, in whole or in part, to earn said lands by the construction of railroads through them within the time prescribed; and

Whereas large bodies of such conditionally granted lands have been and remain withdrawn from sale, pre-emption, and settlement for the benefit of such States and railroad corporations, which have slept on their rights and privileges, to the manifest detriment of the public welfare and the development of the national resources; and

Whereas justice and public policy require that all such lands should be restored to the public domain and that no further grants or extensions of former grants should now be made: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the public lands which have been granted by Congress to aid in the construction of the following-named railroads and telegraph lines, and hereunder specified, which have not been earned under said grants by construction of the sections of railroad contiguous and adjacent thereto, are hereby declared forfeited to the United States, and the privilege to so acquire title to the same is hereby revoked; and said lands are restored to the public domain, and shall hereafter be disposed of as other public lands of the United States.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby instructed, within sixty days after the passage of this act, to give public notice of the date, not exceeding thirty days from the date of publication, when said lands hereby restored to the body of the public lands shall be open to settlement, pre-emption, and homestead entry under the laws provided for said purposes.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. GROOME. I offer the following resolution, and if there be no objection I ask for its immediate consideration:

Whereas it is desirable to have all reports, communications, and other data concerning the proposed interoceanic canal carefully and fully considered and inquired into and speedily reported upon: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a special select committee of nine Senators (to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate) be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine into the subject of the selection of a suitable route for the construction of an interoceanic ship-canal across the American isthmus; and that all petitions, memorials, resolutions, bills, and reports on such canal or other mode of facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans be referred to this committee; that they have the services of a clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate during the sessions, and that said committee have authority to report to the Senate at any time such resolution, bill, or report as may be best adapted to secure such communication between said oceans.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. PENDLETON. I object.

Mr. RANSOM. Let it lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

PRINTING OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to ask for the following order:

Ordered, That the evidence in the matter of the claim of Benjamin Holladay, now pending before the Senate Committee on Claims, be printed.

The order was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was Ordered, That the select committee to examine into the removal of the Northern Cheyennes be authorized to print, for the use of the committee and of the Senate, the testimony as taken in the progress of their investigation.

ADVANCEMENT OF AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, on March 25, 1879, reported it, with the recommendation that it pass:

Whereas agriculture is the foundation of nearly all our wealth, and it is mainly through the exportation of its products that we are paying off our large indebtedness, foreign and domestic, and have the present large balance of trade in our favor; and

Whereas, although about one-half of the people of this country are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and all other interests are dependent upon this our leading and most important interest, commercial and otherwise, yet but little has been done by the General Government to promote agriculture, while other less general and important interests have been largely aided: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committees on Agriculture of the respective Houses be, and they are hereby, instructed to consider generally the subject of agriculture, and report, by bill or otherwise, what can or ought to be done by the General Government to better advance, encourage, and foster agricultural interests; and that said committees shall have the power to send for persons and papers.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of George E. Payne be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE CURRENCY AND COINAGE.

Mr. MORGAN. I hold in my hand a resolution which I desire to present to the Senate this morning, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I submit some remarks upon it. I will send the resolution to the Clerk's desk and have it read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the continuance of the existing volume of United States Treasury notes, with their legal-tender quality preserved, and the maintenance of their equivalency in value with coin, is demanded by the present necessities of trade, commerce, and industry; and that the full restoration of silver coinage to an equality with gold is necessary to secure to the people of the United States a sufficient and permanent supply of money to maintain our national prosperity.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the resolution which I offer is antagonized in principle to the joint resolution already referred to the Committee on Finance, which was offered by the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and which I will read:

That from and after the passage of this resolution the Treasury notes of the United States shall be receivable for all dues to the United States excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender; and any of said notes hereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

In the city of New York this resolution is strongly supported by the classes that control the large mercantile, commercial, and banking interests of the country.

Their opinions are set forth in a petition to Congress, which has been largely signed, as we are informed, by the newspapers, asking for the passage of the joint resolution of the Senator from Delaware. I will refer to that petition as an expression of public sentiment, and although it has not been presented, I hope there is no impropriety in referring to it, as a popular movement, in advance of its actual presentation here. It is useful, as a public fact, to the proper argument of the resolution that I propose to offer. I will refer to the petition as it appears in the public prints.

In discussing the resolution I propose to offer, the merits of the resolution of the Senator from Delaware and the petitions that support it seem to be drawn directly in question.

Stimulated, if not overborne, by a strong demand for radical legislation in reference to our financial system coming from the great center of banking power, there is danger that we shall go too fast and too far in the assertion of theories that we may hold to with strong convictions, but which cannot be enforced at this time and under existing circumstances without serious injury to the people.

We are too prone to believe that our present prosperity is permanent, and I fear we are too confident that it will be maintained.

Starvation in Ireland and depression in Germany and France and England because of the reduction of their volume of money, shipped to this country to purchase food, have resulted, in the usual manner, in putting the price of labor in those countries down to a very low figure. Already they are beginning to undersell us in our own markets, and they must be able to cripple us seriously in foreign markets. American patriotism, like the patriotism of all other people, is not severely shocked at being permitted to purchase foreign goods at low prices. If foreign countries undersell us here they will get our gold to pay the balance of trade. This condition of affairs may well be expected to come around at no distant day, and it seems to me that it is unwise to refuse to recognize its possibility. When this does occur we shall have need of all the good, sound money we have or can get, and possibly more, to prevent a most calamitous revulsion in every department of trade and production.

The petition to Congress to which I have referred is signed by many of the leading capitalists of New York, and represents largely the best and most successful business talent in that great city. It is entitled to respect because of the character of the signers, and to the gravest consideration because of the importance of the subject to which it refers.

The conspicuous absence of names, on the list of signatures, of men who represent the laboring classes and people engaged in small dealings—having little capital—informs us in the most distinct manner that it is the great capitalists and large dealers who are urging this movement.

The opinions of persons such as these are entitled to great weight, and strong influence is universally and justly accorded to their enlightened judgment in such matters. I do not believe that they are either more or less disinterested in their opinions than other classes of men, but their skill in financial management is not usually diverted from making a suitable provision for their own welfare and directed gratuitously to the interests of other classes. The names that are most prominent in this movement cluster in brilliant constellations around the center of financial power in this country, and are largely found to be in Wall street, Chambers street, and Pine street. Not a large proportion of them are from the agricultural or manufacturing sections of New York. New York possesses and controls a ruling influence over the industries and commerce of near fifty million of people in the United States and many millions in other countries. Its control over the financial condition of the whole country, from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the Gulf, is almost supreme. It is the great city of "reserves," under our badly regulated system of national banks, and by force of our statutes it is put in control of from 15 to 25 per cent. of all the amount of deposits in all the banks of issue in the United States and Territories. In addition to this, New York is the depository of the surplus and balances of the national banks of all the towns and cities that are not the "reserve cities." Nearly all the paper discounted and nearly all the exchange sold by banks and bankers in the other States is paid in New York. The Treasury Department does all its financiering in New York, and seems to be unable to use the Government money to pay its debts or its bonds to fund its debts without the assistance of a New York syndicate.

This power has been acquired chiefly in legitimate trade, and has grown to these proportions without having excited the jealousy of other great cities, or of the people of other sections. The people everywhere have accorded to New York the most distinguished position in commercial affairs, and there is scarcely an inhabited part of the United States that has not paid, and is not now paying, its tribute to this metropolis. Beyond any other city it has received the support of the agricultural classes, and its miles of great streets, walled in with palatial structures, have been chiefly built out of this tribute-money. Those who sit at its gates in the receipt of customs collect them from every human being in the United States—the consumers of its merchandise—and the collections amount to nearly two-thirds of our entire revenues derived from imports. The vast capital and credit that New York has accumulated, and at all times has controlled, has been derived mainly from commissions upon the sale of crops, profits on merchandise exchanged for these or sold for money, of banking, and dealing in exchange, the income of great lines of railway, speculations in depreciated money, and in stocks and bonds, life and fire and marine insurance, and in subsidies and liberal appropriations from the Federal Government. It is not unexpectedly, therefore, that we find New York always in the lead with reference to those financial measures that are calculated to give increased power to capital; and it is no indication of a bad or dishonest condition of sentiment if those whose capital is chiefly in manufactures and farming lands, and the labor engaged in production should be opposed to giving any undue and forced supremacy to the power of money thus concentrated in one great financial center.

These interests are not naturally at war with each other, and should not be forced by legislation into unnatural conflict, but the strength of both should be united in a generous rivalry to better the condition of all classes. In the absence of productions capital would be useless, and in the absence of capital productions would scarcely exceed the wants of the rudest forms of social existence, and could never furnish a surplus for commercial exchange. If we would find an illustration of these facts we have only to observe how the populous and fertile countries of Central Africa provide the inhabitants with abundant food without the use of capital, and yet never make a move toward civilization because of their ignorance of the uses of money. In the United States, which is not a more fertile country than Africa, the amount of negro labor that is available in the Central African nations would more than double our entire annual productions. It is all useless to civilization, because it is not and cannot be provided with a medium of exchange in the present barbarous condition of its people.

In some respects, even New York may make mistakes. Because New York is eminently rich in credit and capital it does not follow that her true interests and prosperity depend entirely upon an increase of the purchasing power of money, or of any other power that money may have. Her prosperity depends much more upon increased productions in the country and increased gains to the producing classes than upon her ability to lend money at high rates of interest to a failing people and to buy their property at low prices. This is becoming more obviously true as she drives her railroad enterprises and combinations into every quarter of the country and concentrates an increasing mass of productions in her warehouses. Her customers are found all over the land and her true interests include the prosperity of all parts of the country. This intimate connection between capital and production, it seems to me, should call the attention of the great capitalists of New York to the necessity of the protection and encouragement of the producing classes as well as to the increase of the power of the classes who live by selling productions, lending money, selling goods, dealing in stocks and bonds, banking, insurance, navigation, and by the profit of railroad transportation.

It is my firm conviction, which I state with unaffected deference to the opinions expressed in the petition of these distinguished commercial men, that the resolution which they urge us to adopt must have the effect seriously to embarrass and depress every industry on land and sea in which the producing and manufacturing classes are interested, and that it will have the contrary effect of increasing the wealth of the capitalists by the amount so lost to the great body of the people. I do not impute this purpose and intent to the petitioners, but I believe that they are so dazed with the prospect of increased and well-secured prosperity in their peculiar lines of business, and of the consolidation of their power, that they believe that the measure which will bring such results within their reach must be beneficent to every other interest in the whole country. Their mistake, and it is radical, is in assuming that the money of the country is the only true and legitimate controller and vitalizer of its prosperity, and that all industry is beholden to capital for its success, when the truth is that capital is a mere adjunct of industry—the aggregation of the earnings of industry treasured up in the forms of money and credit—and a means to facilitate the exchange of the fruits thereof.

When the people of this country, or, indeed, of any country, are supplied with a sufficient volume of currency to enable them to make free and rapid exchanges of the fruits of their industry, and have an abiding confidence in that currency, they are in a financial condition that cannot be bettered by any mere legislative expedients to increase the volume of currency, and they must necessarily be injured by such expedients to reduce its volume or its value. And when the rate of interest is in fair proportion with the profits of industry, and prices are remunerative, we have the very best proof that all the financial conditions are in operation that are needful to give proper support and encouragement to all industries and the proper employment of capital. Then it works, and does not speculate. Such is precisely our condition at this time, except that the rate of interest is a little advanced by a speculative demand for money; and I shrink with apprehension from resorting to any form of legislation that may seriously disturb it. That our people are sufficiently supplied with currency is evident from the steady increase of business. Notwithstanding the fact that the sum per capita is much below that of many nations not so prosperous, we are managing to outstrip them in progress. Our people have unwavering confidence in our paper money, because they know that its redemption in coin depends upon their own credit; and they feel strong enough and are true enough to make that credit good and available to meet every public debt. It seems that the petitioners are not satisfied of this fact; they mistrust the fidelity of the people. They want a higher rate of interest, and they want a better security for the repayment of their capital when they lend it. They wish to be able to lend national-bank notes to the people, and to pay them for their crops in this currency, but when the people owe them debts they insist upon the right to demand payment in gold, or, at least, in coin, and to deny to them the right to pay their debts in United States notes. They are becoming alarmed at the mass of capital that is accumulating so near to their stock and produce exchanges. Their fear is that it will betray Wall street into spasmodic speculations, and they want a description of money the volume of which shall be entirely within the control of the national banks.

The industrial classes are all content to earn United States legal-tender notes with their hard labors. But at the first moment after the people's credit has lifted this currency to par with gold, and indeed above par, a sudden and furious demand is made for its demonetization by the capitalists of our great monetary metropolis. I confess that I can discern no just cause for this movement at this time. If a reason ever existed why United States legal-tender currency should be abolished, it was when it was below par. It has cost the people untold losses, sorrows, and calamities, to build up the credit of this money, in the face of repressive laws designed to keep it down, and when they have borne it in triumph to assured success, it must be destroyed at the bidding of those who fear its competition in business.

The people believe in the maxim that nothing in the shape of a promise to pay is money, in the true sense, that is not redeemable in coin; that a government that endeavors to pay its debts, as a matter of right, and not of contract, in fiat money, or in promises that are not to be redeemed, cannot have and is not entitled to have credit at home or abroad. And faithfully and patiently they have labored and suffered to act upon this maxim, and to provide for the redemption of all our promises in coin. They will be astonished to find that their honor and credit are suspected at the very moment when they began to redeem greenbacks with coin. The injustice of this reflection upon them becomes very cruel when we recur to the history of our public debt, and to the sacrifices it has cost the people to provide for it. A few of the most prominent facts are sufficient to illustrate the cruelty of this wrongful and unjust suspicion of the people.

In the beginning of our new financial system which sprung from the war greenbacks were the only public debts that we agreed to pay in coin. The great body of our interest-bearing debt was, by express agreement with every bondholder, payable, at our option, in coin or in our legal-tender paper currency. On the 25th of February, 1862, Congress enacted that "United States notes shall be received the same as coin, at their par value, in payment for any loans that may be hereafter sold or negotiated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and may be reissued from time to time as the exigencies of the public interest shall require," and that they shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, except for duties on imports, &c., and of all claims against the United States, except for interest upon bonds and notes, which shall be paid in coin, and shall also be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States, except duties on imports and interest as aforesaid. That law authorized the issue of one hundred and fifty millions of these Treasury notes and five hundred millions 6 per cent. bonds. On the 1st of March, 1862, Congress authorized the issue of 6 per cent. certificates of indebtedness for the whole amount of audited and settled demands against the United States, and on the 17th of March, 1862, it authorized the issue of any amount of certificates of indebtedness that the Secretary of the Treasury could sell for coin, upon such terms and at such rates as he might deem most advantageous to the public interests. On the 11th of July, 1862, an additional issue of legal-tender notes was authorized to the amount of $150,000,000.

On the 17th of January, 1863, an issue of one hundred millions legal-tender Treasury notes was authorized. On the 3d of March, 1863, bonds to the amount of nine hundred millions, and four hundred and fifty millions in legal-tender Treasury notes, and fifty millions to redeem postal and revenue-stamp currency were authorized. And by a supplementary act of March 3, 1864, bonds were authorized to be issued to the amount of two hundred millions in lieu of those authorized by the act of March 3, 1863, "payable at any period not more than forty years from date in coin." This was the first express provision of law for the payment in coin of any of our bonds, and that was limited to $200,000,000. On the 30th of June, 1864, the issue of four hundred millions was authorized, the interest payable in coin. On the 3d of March, 1865, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to issue bonds to the amount of $600,000,000, "and the principal, or interest, or both, may be payable in coin or in other lawful money," at his discretion. So that in all these issues of bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury was required to issue only two hundred millions of bonds payable in coin, and was authorized at his discretion to issue six hundred millions, payable in coin or other lawful money. The great body of the national debt was subject to the provisions of the act of February 25, 1862, making Treasury notes legal tender and lawful money for their payment, and whoever bought these bonds took them subject to this law, which was a part of every such contract. And every bond that was issued contained an express contract providing for the description of money in which it was to be paid. Since these special contracts were made with the bondholders we have changed their terms by converting all of them into bonds payable in coin. This was done by the republican party on the 18th of March, 1869, by act of Congress, on the pretext of strengthening the public credit, and at the cost to our people of an additional burden of debt amounting to near six hundred millions of dollars. And then on the 14th July, 1870, the grip of the vise was thus further intensified, as I will show by reading the statute:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, in a sum or sums not exceeding in the aggregate $200,000,000, coupon or registered bonds of the United States, in such forms as he may prescribe, and of denominations of $50, or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in coin of the present standard value, at the pleasure of the United States, after ten years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable semi-annually in such coin, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

At the same time, and largely by this means, the greenback currency, which was redeemable in coin, was left to decline in value for the want of coin with which to redeem it. Under the act of Congress of April 12, 1866, greenbacks were required to be retired by being funded in bonds at the rate of not more than $10,000,000 within the first six months from the passage of the act, and not more than $4,000,000 monthly thereafter.

This process sent up the currency price of new bonds of 1865 from 111 in April, 1865, to 122 in April, 1869, and gold went down from 48 per cent. premium in April, 1865, to 35 per cent. in April, 1869. This was the result of restored confidence in the redeemability of our promises, not by the process of contraction, but through the faith of the people that our promises would at some time be kept. On the 4th of February, 1868, Congress suspended further contraction of the currency, and yet the premium on gold continued to sink from that time until greenbacks became its equivalent of value, in January, 1879. The coin resources of the Government had been set apart under a legislative mortgage of our customs receipts for the exclusive benefit of the bondholders, whose agreement was to accept greenbacks for much the greater part of their bonds, while the holders of greenbacks that were payable in coin were cut off from all hope of getting coin for them until after the lapse of many years. Of course they went down in the money market, and those who took them at par found them worth little more than about one-third of their face value in gold in July, 1864, while our bonds were selling at 118 in currency. It was the bad faith of the Government toward the people, and not the bad faith of the people toward the Government, that caused this terrible depreciation of the legal-tender currency. I do not claim that when we reach the period of peace and reaction we should have issued legal-tender currency equal in amount to our bonded debt, for the purpose even of converting into a non-interest-bearing debt, for I believe that such a policy would have recoiled upon our industries to an extent almost as injurious as it was to add $600,000,000 to the burden of the debt. But I do claim that the contract should have been allowed to remain as it was originally made, so that we could have had the advantage of the option to pay such part of the debt in greenbacks as we had in circulation in March, 1869.

It was a breach of plighted faith and a gross injustice to create an enormous demand of gold to pay one class of creditors a mere gratuity upon their untaxed bonds, while we caused another class, who held a different class of debts, redeemable in coin, to lose nearly two-thirds of the face value of their debts and pay the taxes to raise the gold for more fortunate people.

If these obligations had been left unchanged, every bondholder would have been the firm ally of every tax-payer, and of every holder of greenbacks in the effort to maintain them at par for gold. When the bondholders were bound by contract to accept greenbacks for their bonds, they were interested to uphold their value. When they were released from this obligation, the position was reversed, and they were more interested to reduce their value as much as possible below the par of gold. And thus our people were "ground beneath the upper and the nether millstone."

But all these advantages were not considered as being enough for the capitalists. They had gained great ascendency over the people, and it had naturally taken a political form. It entered into the State, and demanded a share in the powers of government. It claimed to be able to control the election of a President; and it was. It demanded the further concession to its electoral power that its novated contract, which in express terms was payable "in coin of the standard value of the United States on the 14th day of July, 1870," should be paid only in gold coin. Silver was then legal tender for all sums, and our mines opened up to meet the necessities of an impoverished people almost as the waters rushed from the rock when smitten with the rod of Moses.

Silver was likely to dethrone gold from its imperial dominion, and the capitalist saw the victimized people preparing to supply a silver coinage from their mines for their own deliverance; and the republican party on their demand demonetized silver. How did they do this fatal work? By exactly the means that are now attempted with reference to greenbacks—they simply destroyed its legal-tender quality. That was all they did, and it sunk and died; and when silver money was thus destroyed our bonds could only be paid in gold coin. Every other possible means of payment Congress had destroyed. The people still had United States notes with which they could pay their debts, one to another, because Congress had imparted to them the legal-tender quality. They were below the par of gold, and to that extent they were a constant loss to the people.

Again, when a President was to be elected, the capitalists made another demand upon the republican party, and it was granted. In 1875 they demanded that the volume of greenback currency should be contracted, and that of the national banks expanded. This demand was not made on the grounds that greenbacks were legal-tender currency, far from it. National-bank notes were redeemable in coin or in legal-tender paper money, at the option of the banks, and in these banks capital had established its citadel. The national bank was its keep and stronghold, where no enemy could prevail against capital. Its untaxed bonds drew interest there, and the Government, while paying interest on the whole sum of the bonds, paid to the bondholders, in advance, nine-tenths of that sum in notes to circulate as money, the final redemption of which in coin was guaranteed by the United States. The Government also gave the bondholders bank charters which they could use in any State or Territory, and then the exclusive monopoly of banking in any and every State; and to make this monopoly effectual and more valuable, the Government destroyed by its laws every State bank of issue by a direct tax of 10 per cent. upon its circulation. Greenback currency would have been long since destroyed but for its usefulness to the national banks as a means of redeeming their circulation. While greenbacks were below par, the national banks used them to redeem their circulation and to keep up their reserves. As soon as greenbacks attained the par value of gold, they ceased to be a convenience to the national banks of heavy capital, such as they have in New York, for the redemption of their issues, and they then became an obstruction to their business. They occupy a field of circulation nearly as large as that covered by national-bank circulation, and if they can be driven out the national banks will have all that field to themselves. And so it seems they must go.

For several years very strenuous efforts were made by capitalists to force a contraction of greenback currency, with a view, as they asserted, to bring the sum of that currency within the capacity of the Government to redeem it in gold. It was to their interest then, as it is to the interest of capitalists now, to get the entire volume of legal-tender money under their control, and until gold and silver became abundant, they being compelled to retain some greenbacks with which to supply a fund for the redemption of their own issues, held on to its legal-tender quality, and struck boldly for the contraction of its volume. This outcry against the volume of this currency was always a pretext to satisfy the country with its removal from the field of competition with the national-bank circulation. How could it be expected that any man would believe this pretense while we were constantly increasing the volume of our interest-bearing debt payable in gold, and increasing our national-bank circulation which the Government is as much bound to redeem in gold as it is to redeem greenbacks in gold? All these debts alike rest on the credit of the people, and their credit was as good to sustain greenbacks at par for gold as it was to sustain one thousand seven hundred and ninety millions of bonds at from 2 to 6 per cent. premium over gold, and as it is to sustain the constantly increasing volume of national-bank currency at par. The contraction policy of 1868, which was such a cruel and ruinous visitation upon the country, leaving the whole land strewn with wrecks of families of good and frugal men brought to poverty and want, and the policy now urged in this petition, and in the resolutions it asks us to adopt, to destroy the legal-tender quality of this currency, are alike in principle, and will, as I fear, result in like disasters to the people.

The contraction policy of 1875 did not renew these evils in their full effect for many reasons, one of which was that a series of very hard years had prevented the extension of credit, but the principal reason was that there was a pledge in the act of 1875—the resumption act—that the volume of greenbacks should not be reduced by compulsory funding below three hundred millions, and after January, 1879, the people were permitted to decide for themselves whether they would accept its redemption in coin. When Congress prohibited the destruction of greenbacks and required their reissue, they did not sink in value, but constantly appreciated, and this is the final proof that the people consider them as good as gold under any system of fair treatment.

Whenever any descriptions of money, whether silver or coin certificates, or greenbacks, or State bank issues, have come in competition with the national-bank currency, they have been assailed with violence, and abused with epithets and revilings, and have been either destroyed or else so crippled that they could not exert their proper influence in our national system of finance.

We have now reached the fifth act in the financial tragedy. The first four acts were under the management of the republican party, namely: first, the change of the character of our debt from a "lawful money" contract to a coin contract; second, the change of that coin contract to a gold contract through the demonetization of silver; third, the rapid and forced contraction of the volume of the greenback currency while we were expending the national-bank currency and increasing the public debt; fourth, the bankruptcy of the people and the desolation of the workshops, filling the land with tramps who were once good citizens; and the making bonfires of cities by compelling the employés of great corporation monopolies to fight for the bread they could not otherwise earn. These were the four acts of the tragedy in which the republican party played all the parts. But most of the stock actors grew faint with overwork, and alarmed at the contemplation of the dreadful denouement that awaits them, and deserted the stage. Some of the great stars are also alarmed and are now attempting to conceal their deadly splendors in clouds of obscurity, and stand by to watch in utter silence, while others—the democrats—are about to finish the performance.

The fifth act, the destruction of one-half of the legal-tender money that remains to the people, is left to the care of the democratic party, which, it is supposed, will be compelled to complete the tragedy under a threat that, if they refuse, New York will withdraw its support. I prefer to let the republicans play out their programme.

Their President, not the people's President, is already on the boards in the title role of the Great Pretender who comes forth with apparently desperate purpose to destroy the greenback currency which is the child of his own household, but reassures his alarmed confrères by telling them, in a stage whisper, that he is not dangerously in earnest, but only acting a part to frighten the democrats into some wild folly. And their Secretary of the Treasury is stepping cautiously toward the stage to resume his character of "Artful Dodger," if the applause seems to justify the venture. Let them play it out and see whether these greater stars now in total eclipse will also come forth again.

Let them complete their work and appeal to a betrayed and ruined country for their reward.

After incalculable sufferings we have reached the point of resumption, and I rejoice at the fact, but deplore the cost of it. The people of the United States have resumed specie payments. Their confidence in their own credit has inspired all classes with the belief that their promises to pay are as good as coin, and that confidence, and only that, has brought us to resumption; and that confidence alone will enable us to maintain it. We know full well that with about four hundred and eighty millions of coin and bullion in the country we cannot pay the annual gold interest of $88,000,000 on the national bonded debt and redeem $683,336,000 of paper currency, but we know that we can, under existing laws, meet promptly every demand that will be made upon us for its redemption, and this fact makes every promise of the Government the equivalent of gold.

Has this result been brought about by the pretext of resumption under which we agreed that on the 1st day of last January we would pay coin for greenbacks over a single counter in New York when presented in sums of not less than $50? As well might we say that the smallest outlet to the sea which helps to drain off the water of the Mississippi put into action the myriad fountain-springs that supply its vast volume of water. That act of resumption only indicated a period of time at which our people would give expression to a common consent and understanding that all our promises should be considered as the equivalent of coin.

When our people uttered this great decree, it was impossible that any power could resist its influence, and it will stand good in despite of any effort of Congress to cast a new and darker shadow of discredit on their good faith by declaring that they are not to be trusted with the duty of keeping their promises at par with gold.

The democratic party attempted to provide two aids to resumption, so as to make the burden easier upon the country. They succeeded over the veto of the President in securing the remonetization of silver. They restored to that coin its legal-tender quality, but were prevented from restoring the coinage of silver to its former equality of privilege with gold. Still, what they succeeded in accomplishing was the most efficient, if not the indispensable, preparation for the resumption of coin payment. They fenced in the Treasury with a barricade of silver, and that saved it from exhaustion. It was only when we had made it possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out silver to the holders of our paper currency when they should demand gold that he was ever able to venture to attempt resumption in its restricted form over a single counter in New York.

The democratic party attempted also as a measure to facilitate resumption, and as a measure of justice to the people as well, to compel by law the Secretary of the Treasury to accept our legal-tender paper money at the custom-houses in payment of duties on imports. This measure was opposed by the great body of the republican party and by its President and Secretary of the Treasury, and was defeated. And yet within a very short time after Congress had adjourned the Secretary of the Treasury, by his mere order to his customs officers, required them to violate the express statute and to receive greenbacks in payment of all customs dues. He found himself compelled to accept democratic policy as a necessary means to resumption, but he availed himself of it not through the constitutional powers of Congress, but by usurping those powers to himself and by enacting a law that Congress had just refused to enact.

It is worse than idle for the demonetizers to declaim against instability in our system and the insecurity of the value of money when a Secretary of the Treasury is permitted, without any objection or even a question of his authority, to annul the most important laws governing finance, and to issue orders by which the whole of our customs revenues are required to be received in a sort of money that he is expressly prohibited to take.

I have presented, as I believe, a just and correct view of the situation and of the measures which have enabled us to reach resumption.

If any further legislation is needed now, I believe that it is to amend the statutes so that greenbacks can be received for customs duties, and so relieve the Secretary of the Treasury from the necessity of violating the laws that he is sworn to execute, and to place silver on an equal footing with gold as to all the privileges of coinage.

I have heard but one argument in support of the resolution of the Senator from Delaware. That argument is, that the existing volume of greenback currency was issued and is kept in circulation in violation of the Constitution of the United States; or that, if this is not true, there is a strong current of opinion against its constitutionality, and that our currency should not be kept in any debatable condition.

The President approved the act of May 31, 1878, requiring that United States legal-tender notes after they have been redeemed should be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation, and in December, 1879, he declares in his message to Congress that not only was that law unconstitutional but that all the laws making United States notes legal tenders that have ever been enacted are in the like category. He thus destroys not only the opinions of every Congress—nine in number—that have met since 1861—opinions that have stood for eighteen years and have been constantly reiterated, and also the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States—but his own opinions. This is a sad havoc of opinions. But the Secretary of the Treasury, not taking such bold ground of hostility to his own opinions heretofore expressed, furnishes a door of escape from their consequences, which I will read from his report for 1879, pages 11 and 12:

> The note of the United States is now received for all public dues, it is carefully limited in amount, it is promptly redeemed on demand, and ample reserves in coin are provided to give confidence in and security for such redemption. With these conditions maintained the United States note will be readily received and paid on all demands. While they are maintained, the legal-tender clause gives no additional credit or sanction to the notes, but tends to impair confidence and to create fears of overissue.

As if it were not quite as easy to overissue national-bank notes as it is legal-tenders or any other Treasury notes that may not be legal tenders!

> It would seem, therefore, that now and during the maintenance of resumption it is a useless and objectionable assertion of power, which Congress might now repeal on the ground of expediency alone. When it is considered that its constitutionality is seriously contested, and that from its nature it is subject to grave abuse, it would now appear to be wise to withdraw the exercise of such a power, leaving it in reserve to be again resorted to in such a period of war or grave emergency as existed in 1862. The Government derives an advantage in circulating its notes without interest, and the people prefer such notes to coin, as money, for their convenience in use and their certain redemption in coin on demand. This mutual advantage may be secured without the exercise of questionable power; nor need any inconvenience arise from the repeal of the legal-tender clause as to future contracts. Contracting parties may stipulate for either gold or silver coin or current money.

A blessed privilege to a man, you will observe, Mr. President, who has his rights secured in the Constitution of the United States, that he must further secure them, in order that they should be available to him under any circumstances, by an express, special contract!

> In the absence of an express stipulation for coin the reasonable presumption would exist that the parties contemplated payment in current money, and such presumption might properly be declared by law and the contract enforced accordingly.

It would be a wonderful act of Congress for us to pass if we should enact that hereafter there should be a presumption attending every contract that that contract was made with reference to its payment in national-bank notes, and that, unless the contract expressly stipulated otherwise, national-bank notes should be a legal tender, in consequence of that established legal presumption, in the payment of debts. It is a wonder what has become of the Constitution in the contemplation of the Secretary of the Treasury when he states propositions of law like this. I do not know a respectable court in the United States that has ever yet held that the debts created between persons in this country, where we have gold coin, silver coin, and greenback notes which are legal tender, and contracted in view of such a currency as this, were followed by the legal presumption that they were not to be paid in that kind of currency, but that they were to be paid in national-bank notes.

There is such a thing in this country as a final settlement of judicial questions, and when the Supreme Court has settled a question purely judicial in its character I think it is right and proper to let that question rest where they have left it. My right under the Constitution to pay my creditor a debt in paper currency can only be upheld or denied by the judgment of a court, when an act of Congress declares that I have such a right. Neither the executive nor legislative departments can adjudge this question. This right to demand gold or silver coin in payment of debt due me, in which I firmly believe, is an individual right—a right as personal to myself as the right to have my person or papers or property protected from unlawful arrest or seizure or destruction. It is a right of the same class as those named. It is in no sense a political privilege, and Congress has no power to deny it or to treat it as a political privilege.

A question is said to be pending in a case now before the Supreme Court with reference to the constitutionality of our reissued legal-tender paper currency, and it is thought best by some not to risk that eminent tribunal on this question, but to treat it as a political question, which Congress may decide at once by an act depriving that currency of its legal-tender quality.

I must deny the power of Congress to do such a thing so as to prevent any man from paying a debt existing at the time of the passage of such an act in legal-tender notes if he had the constitutional right so to pay it when the debt was created. If a debtor ever had the right under the Constitution to pay his debt in legal-tender paper, Congress cannot take from him that right so as to discharge that debt so long as that currency is in circulation. If Congress can do this it can as well declare that gold and silver shall not be a legal tender for debts already existing, and I do not believe it has that power. To do that would be to deprive a man of his property or his rights by a mere legislative declaration, which is not "by due course of law." If Congress can declare that no gold and silver coins and no paper money shall be legal tender it can put a stop to all payment or collection of debts. If any description of money is made legal tender by act of Congress, and if the act is constitutional, it must necessarily follow that Congress cannot pass a retroactive law which will operate to prevent any debtor from paying his debt, contracted before its passage, in that description of money if he can get it. But the resolution of the honorable Senator from Delaware destroys the legal-tender quality of our greenback currency "from and after the passage of this resolution," and makes no reservation of the right of debtors to pay their debts then existing in that sort of money.

I may safely assume, as I believe, that the private indebtedness of the people of this country, and of our numerous corporations, private, public, and municipal, and of the States, is more than four times greater in amount than all the gold and silver coin and all the paper money now in existence in the United States; and this resolution attempts to destroy the right of all these debtors to pay their debts in money that was legal tender when they were created. It is urged, however, by the friends of this measure, that because our legal-tender notes are redeemable now in coin, that their demonetization will not affect their value. Yet I cannot understand why, if this be so, we should find it necessary, as a measure of relief to the country, to convert greenbacks from a legal-tender currency into a currency through which legal-tender money may be obtained. If no other change than this will occur from the demonetization of greenbacks, we are controverting here over a mere abstraction—a question of constitutional law that the Supreme Court should decide and must decide, and that is not brought into Congress by the pressure of any public necessity. Without attempting to forecast what may be the effect of such a measure upon our newly dawning prosperity, or to predict the evils that will follow such harsh legislation, I cannot justly refrain from declaring it as my belief that a more serious breach of public faith could not be enacted into a law. All of this vast mass of indebtedness that was contracted since the war, was based upon the solemn pledge of the Government that the creditor should be compelled to receive payment in United States legal-tender notes whenever they were duly tendered to him on or after the maturity of the debt.

To deprive this currency of its legal-tender quality, and yet leave it in circulation as money, as is proposed in the resolution, is to destroy an important element of its value and to cancel the promise of the Government printed on every bill, that it should be legal tender in payment of debts, while they remain in the pockets of the people. I cannot conceive of worse treatment than this. They must stand as they are or be redeemed. The laws under which this currency was created were enacted in time of war, and the necessity so created is regarded by some great jurists as justifying its issue under the constitutional power to declare war and to raise and support the Army and Navy. I may not be convinced, as I am not indeed, that the power thus derived is sufficient to support the act imputing to paper money a legal-tender quality.

It would be better to amend the Constitution and define and make specific the power to create legal-tender paper-money, and confine the power to fixed limits, than to rest it upon the uncertain event of war or other urgent necessity. I am afraid, if this is a war power, and cannot be exercised in time of peace, that some of our inflationists might even be willing to force the country into some foreign or domestic war with a view to an increase of legal tenders and the restoration of financial prosperity, as they view it. It might even be better to have the unlimited power of inflation in the keeping of the national banks, that now possess it under our laws up to the amount of our entire bonded debt, if they choose to use it, rather than risk a war to justify the expansion of legal-tender currency.

But that question has been authoritatively decided by the Supreme Court, which has the right to follow its reasoning, and that is the only tribunal that can finally decide this question, which, as a question of law, can only affect two classes of people, the debtors and creditors.

If there was ever an occasion when the necessity of the rule stare decisis was more obvious than in all others, it is in this case. These decisions of the Supreme Court affirming the constitutionality of these laws have become all-pervading laws of property, and have entered into and controlled every transaction in which there is no special contract for payment of a debt in coin or in some commodity, so that it may be said with absolute certainty that almost the entire existing volume of indebtedness among the people was contracted with direct reference to the legal-tender quality of greenbacks.

Because some of us differ in opinion with the Supreme Court on these subjects it is proposed to destroy their jurisdiction to enforce their decision in cases now pending in that court and in all that may come before it, and by joint resolutions to revise their judgment declaring the law as it stood originally to be constitutional. I have endeavored to show that the resolution of the honorable Senator can never constitutionally reach its purpose. It will die of the same infirmity that it proposes to cure. It will perish under the guarantees of the Constitution that provide a due course of law, to be administered in the courts, for the protection of citizens in their personal rights with reference to their rights of property and indebtedness. The statutes upon which this currency rests are still unrepealed, and their constitutionality has been settled by a judicial decree. If there have been any essential changes in these laws let the Supreme Court decide whether they are constitutional enactments. If we declare them unconstitutional we only set the opinion of one Congress against another, against many others indeed that have directed the reissue of this money, and it is our plain duty in such conflicts of opinion to submit the question to the arbitrament of the Supreme Court.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes to the statutes on this subject, first the act of 1862, which originally ordained and established the greenback system. In the first section it is provided:

> And such United States notes shall be received the same as coin, at their par value, in payment for any loans that may be hereafter sold or negotiated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and may be reissued from time to time as the exigencies of the public interest shall require.

Every single greenback act that was passed subsequent to that time by the Congress of the United States contained that provision substantially. Whenever a new issue of greenbacks was authorized by law it contained the express provision that they should be reissued by the Secretary of the Treasury as the exigencies of the country might from time to time require.

Was not that part of the constitutionality of the law at the time of its enactment? Did that feature have anything to do with its constitutionality? It had as much to do with the constitutionality of the law as the original provision for the issue of greenbacks had. So that when the Supreme Court decided that that law was constitutional, that law provided for the reissue of the greenbacks, and none of these laws have ever yet been repealed; they stand upon the statute-book, and the act of the last Congress for the reissue of these notes was a mere further declaration of the will of Congress, based upon the original authority contained in the laws themselves, that these notes should be reissued—part of the original law itself, part of the elementary nature of the issue itself, that they might be reissued and should be reissued.

Let us have these great controversies settled for the sake of the public welfare, and let the people know that there is an end of strife concerning them. These questions are too grave to admit of light or passionate treatment, and the use of epithet or denunciation is extremely ill-timed in this discussion. United States legal-tender notes are being bitterly denounced as dishonest money. It is a noteworthy fact, however, that the destruction of this currency for the cause of their dishonesty was never urged while it was below the par of gold. As soon as it has reached that standard and become everywhere the equal of gold, and, indeed, its superior in popular favor, it is assailed for dishonesty. Who are they who thus assail it? Chiefly those who also denounce silver as dishonest money, and who deny to all coin except gold an honest character, and to all paper money except national-bank notes an approximation toward respectability.

The $346,000,000 of United States notes now in circulation perform the same functions as if every dollar they call for was a gold dollar. But its presence reduces the power of gold over the labor and industries and property of the people, and at the same time relieves the people from the necessity of paying a heavy premium to the national banks on $346,000,000 of their issues which will take the place of greenbacks, and it is not a matter of surprise that gold and the national banks are moving in concert to destroy their great rival and regulator. The prize they seek to win is worthy of their best efforts.

It is true that some of the weaker national banks will break if their charter right to redeem their issues in legal-tender notes is taken from them, but the sections of the country from which these petitions come have strong banks that are backed by the concentration of immense capital in the great commercial cities and the failure of the weaker banks elsewhere would only leave open to them a wider field, and a more perfect control of finance and commerce.

I believe that to demonetize greenbacks now would be as fatal to our prosperity as was the demonetization of silver. I cannot understand why the destruction of the legal-tender quality of $346,000,000 of greenbacks would not work as serious mischief to our people as would result from the demonetization of that sum of silver coin. I cannot rid myself of the conviction also that this measure is only the first step in a movement that is designed to re-establish gold as the only full legal-tender coin, and national-bank notes as the only paper currency. The friends of these two projects are always found together, and their movements are in complete harmony.

The political significance of this movement is calculated to excite the gravest apprehensions of danger in some sections of the country.

It is more than intimated in the leading papers that demand the demonetization of the legal-tender currency, that largely capitalized cities control great States having many electoral votes, and unless those who strive to defend the people against the power of monopolies, and the power of privileged classes, will agree to adopt their financial policy, they will be handed over to a party that has always been the friend of privilege and monopoly for political control. I fear that such a coalition will be too easily made.

It appears that the alternative is about to be presented to us that we shall submit to the power of centralized capital to control the prosperity and industries of the people, or the dominion of centralized political power to control their privileges as citizens and their rights as individuals. What we shall do when such an alternative is presented it is only for me to conjecture. But I hope we shall still stand by the people and still endeavor to protect their personal rights and liberties against the encroachments of monopoly and privilege, whether they are supported by the power of money or by the powers of despotic political government. If we yield to this demand, it may again reduce us to poverty and sorrow and haunt our firesides with the gaunt specter of starvation that hovered about them when gold reigned a supreme monarch in the land and all industry was paralyzed.

I am not ready to suddenly dispense with any fiscal agency or any currency that has been proven by experience to be a valuable assistance to the people in their patriotic effort to bear the great burden of our public debt. This debt still hangs over us and demands an annual contribution of $88,000,000 from the people. This debt is as much a part of the war as if hostilities had not yet ceased. Its shadow hangs, like the smoke of the battle-field, over the entire country. If its origin was in a time of extreme necessity, and if its justification as a legal tender is under the law of necessity, so long as that debt remains unpaid the necessity that gave it origin and constitutional sanction remains to support it. Legal-tender notes and national bank notes were both born of the necessities of the times.

If this great sum that we pay for interest was annually contributed to the increase of our wealth, we would soon become the richest people in the world. Even at the moderate rate of interest that we are paying we will have expended in that way more than four times the sum of the entire debt before we get it paid. We are also paying about $40,000,000 per annum for the use of $337,000,000 of national-bank currency. Of this sum about $13,000,000 are for interest on their bonds deposited to secure the circulation of the national banks, and the remainder is at the low rate of 5 per cent. upon the loan of their issues to the people. I say a low rate, because I believe that every dollar of national-bank issues cost the borrowers at least 10 per cent. per annum. The sum of the loans by the national banks in 1878 was $834,000,000, being more than twice the amount of their circulation, and this sum could not have yielded less than 5 per cent. by way of interest, discount, and exchange. With the national debt still to be paid, and with about one-third of our entire volume of money thus hampered with the price of extortionate interest, it is not unnatural or unjust that the people should be jealous of all attempts to demonetize greenbacks and silver money, which cost them nothing for interest when it issues from the Government.

We cannot keep gold in this country by legislation that relates only to its value as money. If we keep it here, it will be by maintaining the balances of trade in our favor. As soon as these balances of trade are against us our recent acquisitions of gold which we have made, from the same cause, will flow away from us. The notes of the Bank of England and of the Imperial Bank of Germany do not come here to pay balances. Gold, and only gold, comes to pay the balances. If our only paper money is to be the notes of the national banks, not one dollar of them will ever go abroad to pay balances. Neither will United States notes go abroad for this purpose. But when gold shall leave us, as sometimes it must in the discharge of its functions in international commerce, if we have a proper volume of legal-tender paper money, kept at par by the confidence of our people in its redemption in gold or silver coin, we shall not find our industries paralyzed by the absence of gold, and we can keep at work to earn enough again to change the balance of trade in our favor.

Why, then, should we at this time strike down the legal-tender quality of the existing volume of greenback currency that the Supreme Court has decided to be constitutional money? Whether that decision was right or wrong in principle it is an accomplished fact, and it is rashness now to attempt to destroy it. If this policy must be adopted, let it take effect five years hence, and let the people have time to prepare for this contraction, as was done with reference to resumption. It would be cruelty to force them into this strait at this time, and the first panic among the wild men of Wall street or the first material failure in our crops would remand the people to the miseries of 1873–1877. I would not now abolish the national banks, neither would I cripple them in their legitimate business; on the other hand, I would not consent that our bonds should never be paid in order to keep up a supply of capital for those banks.

I would fully respect their charter rights until their charters expire, or until I found that they were abusing them, as was done by some great national railroad corporations, and then, as we did with them, I would control them so that they should not disturb the general welfare.

I would, as soon as might be safe and just, require all banking to be done on terms of equality, and would abolish the monopoly that enables the national banks to draw interest on the fund deposited with the Government to secure their circulation, while the holders of gold and silver are not permitted to bank upon it at all.

I would remove all taxation from the circulation of the national banks so as to cheapen the money to the people. They now pay this tax to the banks, and they in turn pay it to the Government. I was never in favor of a national-bank system, but that it is a useful and safe fiscal agency through which the Government can issue money to the people I must admit, and that it has done good service in regulating exchanges is beyond question. Still the banks, as the laws are now, have the unlimited power of expansion, and when legal-tender paper money is destroyed will have an unrestricted power of contraction, and I believe they should be controlled in the exercise of these powers. They are powerful, and may become dangerous combinations, and I would never increase their power by removing any other currency that will keep them in check, at least while they possess their existing ability to control the value of the labor and property of the people. At this time, when the country is just rising from its disastrous fall in 1873, I must vote against any measure that I am convinced would disturb the financial condition of the country, because there is no existing evil that I can discover that it is necessary to correct by radical legislation, and there is extreme danger that we shall destroy the confidence of our own people in the good faith of the Government in its dealings with them, and thereby put a stop to the progress we are just beginning to make toward a general and assured prosperity.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What motion does the Senator submit in reference to the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PROVIDENCE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill (S. No. 820) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOMERVILLE & DAVIS.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 324 be taken up It is a small bill reported by the Finance Committee and will not take a minute I am sure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 324) for the relief of Somerville & Davis. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the claim of Somerville & Davis, of Galveston, Texas, for excess of duties paid by them on twelve hundred and sixty-eight bundles of cotton-ties imported by them, per steamship China, at the port of Boston, July 29, 1876, and to refund to them the amount found to have been paid in excess of the duties chargeable by law.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Is there any report in the case?

Mr. MAXEY. There is a report from the Committee on Finance. It is very short and explains the matter.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BAYARD on the 15th instant:

The Committee on Finance, to whom the bill (S. No. 324) for the relief of Somerville & Davis was referred, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The closing sentences of the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, May 17, 1878, to the then chairman of this committee (Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont) contains a judgment upon this case in which your committee fully concur:

* * * * * * *

"This Department, upon investigating the matter, ascertained that such representations were true, and that the original claim of the importers was corre

"The Department, however, owing to the failure of the importers to bring suit within ninety days from the date of its decision on their appeal, whereby, under section 2931 of the Revised Statutes, such decision became final and conclusive, was unable to grant any relief to the importers in the premises.

"From the foregoing it will be seen that the importers are equitably entitled to have their entry of the said goods reliquidated at a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem, and to have the excessive duties refunded to them, but that, owing to their failure to comply with the requirements of the provisions of law above specified, such course cannot be taken without authority from Congress.

"I think the bill should pass.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN SHERMAN,
"Secretary."

Wherefore, your committee report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMISSION OF DUTIES ON PRIZES.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 840.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 840) to exempt from taxation competitory prizes won by American citizens in foreign countries.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I understand that the House of Representatives always deny the power of the Senate to initiate such legislation as this.

Mr. BAYARD. This is not a question of raising revenue.

Mr. THURMAN. They have made that point, however. I have no objection to the measure itself, but that was a matter upon which we had a reference to a joint committee of conference, and had a long report from Mr. Scott on the part of the Senate managers, and the two Houses could not come to any agreement, one way or the other. I shall vote for the bill, but I rather think its passage here will amount to nothing.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. We pass bills too hastily here, Mr. President. I think it is time to adjourn. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. I would ask my colleague to withdraw that motion for a moment to allow me, as I was not in during the morning hour, to present some papers.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I have no sort of objection; but if I yield to my colleague somebody else will ask me to withdraw the motion for some other purpose. He can present his papers to-morrow morning as well as now. I should like to oblige my colleague, but I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and thirteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

Sayre, mother of deceased.

Mr. DUNNELL. This resolution would establish a new precedent. I think it should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. HERBERT. I will say to the gentleman that the precedent is already established. A resolution of similar character to this was passed during the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress. This resolution is to provide for the funeral expenses, &c., of the young man who stood at the western door of this Hall during last session and during the last Congress. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. DUNNELL. I prefer that the resolution should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. HERBERT. Very well; let it be referred.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. That depends on the subject of the report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BUCKNER. It is.

No. 3032) to provide for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Fort Smith, on the line of the Indian Territory and the line of the State of Arkansas, to Arkansas City, on the line of said Indian Territory and the line of the State of Arkansas, so as to secure to the General Government better postal facilities and a shorter line of travel for the general public; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

DELIVERY OF LETTERS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the morning hour, which commences at nineteen minutes past twelve o'clock m. The first question in order is the unfinished business of yesterday, being a bill (H. R. No. 3014) to facilitate the delivery of letters and the speedy return to the writers thereof of such as are refused or cannot be delivered, reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] with amendments.

Mr. MONEY. I move the bill and amendments be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Reports are still in order from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

EXEMPTION FROM JURY DUTY.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1534) to exempt postal employés from serving on juries, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that all persons engaged in any branch of the postal service shall be exempt from serving on juries or from any penalty for neglect thereof.

Mr. JONES. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VALUELESS PAPERS—POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2959) to authorize the Postmaster-General to dispose of or destroy certain valueless papers accumulated in the Post-Office Department; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. A. P. BELL.

Mr. STONE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of Mrs. A. P. Bell, of Bertie County, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. STONE, from the same committee, submitted adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 613) for the relief of Ashbrook & Tucker; and Petition of B. D. Holmes, George W. Roberts, and J. R. B. Bisbee, and 79 other citizens, for the relief of the three first named from liability on a bond for carrying the mails.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURT, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. KNOTT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1241) to authorize the holding of terms of the United States district court for the district of West Virginia, at Martinsburgh, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that hereafter terms of the district court of the United States for the district of West Virginia, in addition to those now prescribed by law, shall be held at Martinsburgh on the 1st day of June and the 1st day of December in each year; provided, that when either of said days shall fall on Sunday the term shall be commenced the day following; and provided further, that the terms of court hereby authorized to be held at Martinsburgh shall be held only on condition that all the buildings and necessary conveniences to the holding of said terms shall be furnished by the county of Berkeley free of all cost and expense to the United States.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the bill just read is the same which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session of the last Congress by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] and which passed unanimously. The propriety of its passage is seen from the single fact that while there are three places in the State of West Virginia at which the district court of the United States holds its session, the nearest one is over two hundred miles from the town of Martinsburgh where it is proposed the term shall be held under the bill just reported. There can be no objection to it. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK, JUDICIAL DISTRICT, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. KNOTT also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 358) to provide for the appointment of an additional clerk in the western judicial district of North Carolina.

The preamble states that whereas, since the passage of the act of Congress of June 4, 1872, which limited the number of the clerks in the western judicial district of the State of North Carolina, a term of the district and circuit courts has been established at Charlotte, in said State. The bill provides that, in addition to the clerks of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western judicial district of the State of North Carolina now authorized by law, the circuit and district judges of said district shall be empowered to appoint a clerk to said courts who shall reside and keep his office at the city of Charlotte, in said State.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "shall be" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "are hereby;" so that the clause shall read: "the circuit and district judges of said court are hereby empowered," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ACKLEN. I should like to know whether this is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. KNOTT. It is.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. KNOTT also, from the same committee, reported back a resolution of the House, with a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The original resolution will first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint committee of three Senators and five Representatives be appointed to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, or compensations allowed to officers of the United States circuit and district courts to ascertain whether any, and if any, what, abuses now exist or may have existed under the present system, and to report by bill or otherwise what legislation may be necessary to correct the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint committee of three Senators and five Representatives be appointed to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, and emoluments allowed to the officers of the several courts of the United States to ascertain whether any, and if any, what, abuses now exist or have existed or may take place thereunder, and to report by bill or otherwise. That said committee shall have power to employ a clerk and the service of a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and examine witnesses, and to report at any time.

The substitute was adopted, and the resolution, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS AT COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Mr. HURD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the counties of Union, Delaware, Marion, Morrow, Knox, Coshocton, Tuscarawas, Harrison, and Jefferson, heretofore composing a part of the northern district of Ohio, be transferred to, and henceforth form a part of, the southern district of Ohio.

SEC. 2. A term of the circuit court and of the district court for the southern district of Ohio shall be held at Columbus in said State on the first Tuesday of the months of June and December in each year; and one grand jury and one petit jury only shall be summoned, and serve in both of said courts at each term thereof.

SEC. 3. Said southern district shall be, and hereby is, divided into two divisions, to be known as the eastern and the western division of the southern district of Ohio. The eastern division shall consist of thirty-three counties, to wit: Union, Delaware, Marion, Morrow, Knox, Coshocton, Tuscarawas, Harrison, Jefferson, Madison, Fayette, Franklin, Pickaway, Ross, Pike, Scioto, Lawrence, Gallia, Jackson, Meigs, Vinton, Athens, Hocking, Fairfield, Licking, Perry, Muskingum, Morgan, Washington, Noble, Monroe, Belmont, and Guernsey; and the western division shall consist of the remaining counties in said district. But no additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in said district.

SEC. 4. All suits not of a local nature in the circuit and district courts against a single defendant, inhabitant of said State, must be brought in the division of the district where he resides; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of the district, such suits may be brought in either division. All issues of fact in said suits shall be tried at a term of the court held in the division where the suit is so brought.

SEC. 5. All offenses committed in either of the subdivisions shall be cognizable and indictable within said division.

SEC. 6. Actions or proceedings now pending at Cincinnati, in said district, which would under this act be brought in the eastern division of said district, may be transferred, by the consent of all the parties, to said eastern division; and in case of such transfer, all papers and files therein, with copies of all journal-entries, shall be transferred to the deputy clerk's office at Columbus, and the same shall be proceeded with in all respects as though it originally commenced in the eastern division.

SEC. 7. All grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division. All mesne and final process subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained issued in either of said divisions may be served and executed in either or both of the divisions.

SEC. 8. This act shall be in force from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1879; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Section 1, line 3, strike out the word "Marion."

Section 2, strike out the last paragraph commencing "and one grand jury," &c.

In section 3, line 5, strike out the word "Marion."

Section 3, line 4, strike out "33" and insert "32."

In section 8, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "July" and "1879," and insert respectively "March" and "1880." Change numeral "8" into "9," so it will be section 9.

After section 7 insert a section to read as follows:

SEC. 8. In all cases of removal of suits from the courts of the State of Ohio to the courts of the United States in the southern district of Ohio, such removal shall be to the United States courts in the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made, and the time within which the removal shall be perfected, in so far as it refers to or is regulated by the terms of the United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the United States courts in such division.

Mr. WARNER. I did not expect this bill to come up at this time, and I would like to have it deferred until some day, say immediately, after the recess. All the counties of the district I represent are embraced in the bill, and although I presume most of them will be convenienced by its passage, some may not be. I have received but one communication relating to the matter; I would like to have time to properly consider the bill. I should therefore like to have the consideration of it by the House postponed until after the recess.

Mr. HURD. The gentleman who introduced the bill desires it should be considered now. The matter was under discussion very thoroughly before the Judiciary Committee, and that committee was unanimously of the opinion the bill should pass. It was introduced at the extra session, and any parties who had any objections had a full opportunity to be heard before the Judiciary Committee, if they desired. And as the interests of that part of Ohio to which it relates are largely concerned in the passage of the bill, I insist on my motion for the previous question. This very bill passed the House in the Forty-fifth Congress after having received the unanimous approbation of the Judiciary Committee of that Congress.

Mr. WARNER. As I only reached my seat while the bill was being read, I wish to inquire if it is before the House by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. No, sir. It is before the House as a report from the Judiciary Committee under the regular call of committees. There is no mode of getting rid of it, except by a vote of a majority of the House.

Mr. WARNER. I offer the following amendment to the second section:

After the word "held," in line 2, insert "alternately," and after "Columbus" insert "and Marietta;" so that it will read: "held alternately at Columbus and Marietta."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman who reports the bill yield for that amendment?

Mr. HURD. I do not.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 62, noes 19.

So (further count not being insisted on) the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendments; and, with the permission of the House, the Chair will submit them in gross.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would like to hear the bill read again.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the bill to be read as proposed to be amended by the committee, so that the House will understand exactly, if the amendments of the committee are adopted, what will be in the bill as proposed to be passed.

The bill was then read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would like to inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge if it is a unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HURD. It is the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HURD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 1518, to create an additional judicial district for the State of Georgia, and for other purposes, a bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern judicial district, in said State; which was read a first and second time.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the counties of Pike, Butts, and Jasper, heretofore composing a part of the northern district of Georgia, be transferred to and henceforth form a part of the southern district of Georgia.

SEC. 2. Said southern district shall be, and hereby is, divided into two divisions, to be known as the eastern and the western divisions of the southern district of Georgia. The western division shall consist of forty-three counties, to wit: Bibb, Monroe, Jones, Twiggs, Houston, Crawford, Baldwin, Wilkinson, Laurens, Pulaski, Dooly, Macon, Taylor, Upson, Pike, Butts, Jasper, Putnam, Hancock, Warren, Dodge, Wilcox, Telfair, Sumter, Schley, Marion, Talbot, Harris, Muscogee, Chattahoochee, Stewart, Webster, Lee, Terrell, Randolph, Quitman, Clay, Calhoun, Dougherty, Baker, Early, Miller, and Mitchell. The eastern division shall consist of the remaining counties in said district. No additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in said district.

SEC. 3. A term of the circuit court and of the district court for the southern district of Georgia shall be held at Macon, in said State, on the first Mondays of May and October in each year.

SEC. 4. All suits not of a local nature in the circuit and district courts against a single defendant, inhabitant of said State, must be brought in the division of the district where he resides; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of the district, such suits may be brought in either division. All issues of fact in said suits shall be tried at a term of the court held in the division where the suit is so brought.

SEC. 5. All offenses committed in either of said divisions shall be cognizable and indictable within said division.

SEC. 6. Actions or proceedings now pending at Savannah in said southern district, which would, under this act, be brought in the western division of said district, may be transferred, by the consent of all the parties, to said western division; and in case of such transfer, all papers and files therein, with copies of all journal entries, shall be transferred to the deputy clerk's office at Macon, and the same shall be proceeded with in all respects as though it was originally commenced in the western division.

SEC. 7. In all cases of removal of suits from the courts of the State of Georgia to the courts of the United States in the southern district of Georgia, such removal shall be to the United States courts in the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made, and the time within which the removal shall be perfected, in so far as it refers to or is regulated by the terms of the United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the United States courts in such division.

SEC. 8. All grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division. All mesne and final process, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in either or both of the divisions.

SEC. 9. This act shall be in force from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1880. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to make an inquiry of my colleague who represents the city of Macon. I understand from him that this arrangement of the counties between the eastern and western districts meets the concurrence of the leading members of the bar in the eastern portion of the district, particularly of Augusta. Is that so?

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand so from the leading members of the bar in my city, who have communicated with members of the bar in the various sections.

Mr. STEPHENS. In that case I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PHILIP FRANCIS RENAULT.

Mr. ATHERTON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2054) for the relief of the heirs of Philip Francis Renault, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

G. B. URNER.

Mr. ATHERTON, from the same committee, also reported back the petition for the relief of G. B. Urner, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. BAYNE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on War Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized to send for persons and papers whenever in the judgment of the said committee it shall be necessary to obtain additional evidence in regard to any claim before it.

TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. McCOID, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 125) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. Congress, for promotion of trade and manufactures, and to carry into effect international treaties, shall have power to grant, protect, and regulate the exclusive right to adopt and use trade-marks.

That this amendment shall be valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

Mr. McCOID. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred H. R. No. 125, having had the same under consideration, do make the following report thereon:

The joint resolution proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of great and immediate importance. The amendatory article proposed is as follows:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"SECTION 1. Congress, for promotion of trade and manufacture, and to carry into effect international treaties, shall have power to grant, protect, and regulate the exclusive right to adopt and use trade-marks."

The occasion for the proposal of such an amendment, as is probably well known to every member of the House, is peculiar. Under the eighth clause of the eighth section of article 1 of the Constitution, Congress assumed the power granted by this amendment by the act of July 8, 1870, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights." That portion of said act material to this subject is as follows:

"Any person or firm domiciled in the United States and any corporation created by the authority of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and any person, firm, or corporation resident of or located in any foreign country which, by treaty or convention, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, and who are entitled to the exclusive use of any lawful trade-mark, or who intend to adopt and use any trade-mark for exclusive use within the United States, may obtain protection for such lawful trade-mark, by complying with the following requirements:

"First. By causing to be recorded in the Patent-Office a statement specifying the names of the parties, and their residences and place of business, who desire the protection of the trade-mark; the class of merchandise, and the particular description of goods comprised in such class, by which the trade-mark has been or is intended to be appropriated; a description of the trade-mark itself, with facsimiles thereof, showing the mode in which it has been or is intended to be applied and used; and the length of time, if any, during which the trade-mark has been in use.

"Second. By making payment of a fee of $25 in the same manner and for the same purpose as the fee required for patents.

"Third. By complying with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Patents."

Under these statutes it was further provided that such trade-marks should remain in force for thirty years, subject to indefinite renewals. The common-law remedies for infringement were also enacted.

In August, 1876, further protection was given to the grantees of trade-marks by providing for the punishment of the fraudulent use, sale, and counterfeiting of such commercial symbols by fine and imprisonment.

Under these statutes the United States has registered trade-marks, as follows:

Trade-marks registered and fees received by Patent Office in trade-mark cases.

And has received in fees the sum of $211,750. Has entered into treaty obligations for the mutual protection of trade-marks, with Great Britain, June 1, 1879; the Austro-Hungarian Empire, June 1, 1872; Belgium, July 30, 1869; France, April 16, 1869; the German Empire, June 1, 1872; Russia, January 27, 1868; Brazil, June 17, 1879.

The business men of the world have awakened to the fact that manufacture and trade require national and international control and protection of genuine commercial signatures to identify and distinguish property made and marked by cosmopolitan tradesmen. At this juncture the commercial world is astonished to find that, alone among the nations, the United States has no power to grant, protect, or regulate trade-marks. This has been finally determined by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States at the October term, 1879, in the cases of The United States vs. Emil Steffins; Same vs. Adolph Witteman; Same vs. W. W. Johnson, T. E. McNamara, and N. S. Reeder.

As but a limited number of copies of that decision have been published, and it is so able and comprehensive as to be incapable of a satisfactory synopsis, your committee has deemed it best to set out the entire opinion. (See opinion attached.)

This, then, is the occasion which has arisen for the proposed change in the fundamental charter of the Government.

There arise two questions as to the propriety and necessity of the amendment:

First. Is the subject of sufficient importance to demand of the States this additional grant of constitutional power to the General Government?

Second. Is it a matter of such character as to require the legislative control of the National Government instead of being left to the local legislation of the several States?

In answer to the first question your committee deem it necessary to add but little to the facts already stated in the history of congressional and international action upon the subject.

The following considerations may be added:

The paramount interest of the Government to protect the innocent purchasers of manufactured goods from deception, frauds, and countless impositions. The beneficial effects of encouraging the establishment and maintenance of good commercial character on part of manufacturers protected by law. The stimulating and energizing the trade and commerce of our own people, giving them equal chances with citizens of other nations.

Trade-marks are now universally regarded as necessary to business. They have grown into use with the growth of civilization and progressive trade. All manufactures, all kinds of business adopt and use them. They are the ensigns of honor and popularity under which business men ship their goods from State to State and nation to nation. And now our commerce challenges the competition of the most prosperous countries. We are fast becoming the merchants, and our ingenious, industrious, and enterprising people, above all others, need this commercial proprietary protection.

As to the second question, your committee regard this as peculiarly the subject of national legislative control.

Nothing could be more detrimental to the interests of manufacture, trade, and commerce than the unharmonious local and conflicting legislation which would necessarily arise if this subject should be left to the States. The interest and safety of all demand that it, along with the power of making war, peace, and treaties; of taxation, regulating commerce, and coining money; of granting patents and copyrights, should be vested in the General Government.

No one State could adequately protect her own citizens, much less the citizens of other States. The mere civil rights existing at common law are insufficient and impractical. No criminal law of a State can be framed comprehensive enough to cover violations of the rights of persons injured.

The treaty-making power, of which this becomes an incident, belongs solely to the General Government.

The various countries of the world have assumed national control of this subject. Austria passed a law granting and protecting trade-marks December 7, 1858, with general provisions and penalties such as our present laws of Congress. Bavaria has had such a law since 1840. In Belgium trade-marks are governed by the decrees of 1801, the law of 1803, and decree of 1810. Great Britain has the "merchandise-marks act" of 1862. France passed such a law June 23, 1857. Prussia, Sardinia, Spain, Würtemberg, each, have protective laws.

The subject is not local. A trade-mark cannot be localized; it knows no State line. It is of the essential nature of a patent and a copyright in the method of its grant, regulation, and protection.

In the interest of revenue and economy of government it is also an important national subject. It is a source of considerable revenue.

The Government has already received at the hands of grantees of trade-marks, under the laws now declared unconstitutional, $211,750. This sum must be refunded in justice to such parties, unless the consideration for its receipt is made good by the adoption of this amendment and legislation under it.

All these rights are now suspended and await action. Many of the State Legislatures meet this winter, and may ratify the proposed amendment at once.

Your committee therefore, in view of these facts, regard this resolution of immediate importance, and recommend its passage before adjournment for vacation.

Mr. SAMFORD. From what committee does this come?

The SPEAKER. From the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. SAMFORD. It proposes an amendment to the Constitution?

The SPEAKER. It does, in reference to trade-marks.

Mr. SAMFORD. I think a matter of that importance should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. If an objection will prevent its consideration at this time I will object.

The SPEAKER. An objection will not prevent its consideration now.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCOID] yield for that motion?

Mr. McCOID. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has the right to test the sense of the House on seconding the demand for the previous question on this joint resolution. If a majority of the House are opposed to it they can vote down the previous question.

Mr. McCOID. I call the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 65, noes 50.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. McCOID, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. SAMFORD.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 80, noes 70.

So the demand for the previous question was seconded.

The question was taken upon ordering the main question to be now put; and upon a division there were—ayes 75, noes 60.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 27 in the affirmative; one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 95, not voting 82, as follows:

YEAS—114.

Mr. FINLEY. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The main question has been ordered upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and the bill continues before the House notwithstanding the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. McCOID. I would like to say something upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman having reported the bill is entitled to the floor, notwithstanding the main question has been ordered.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that there would be no opposition to this resolution, having been induced so to believe from general consultation with members. The objection made this morning is not to the substance of the resolution; and I have heard no substantial objection from any member either on this floor or out of the House. I believe there is no objection to the substance of the resolution. But it is said that it ought to have come from the Judiciary Committee. I think that is a mistake. The subject of trade-marks is peculiarly a subject within the province of the Committee on Manufactures; and has been so considered by the House, as indicated by the reference of the resolution to that committee. The committee met and considered the resolution; referred it to a sub-committee. That sub-committee gave it careful consideration, both as to the necessity and propriety of the measure and as to the form in which it is presented, and they unanimously made a favorable report to the committee. The full committee, after careful consideration, reported unanimously in favor of the resolution. This measure, then, comes before the House upon a unanimous report of a committee to whom it was referred in regular order by direction of the House. It seems to me that the committee deserves the courtesy and consideration of this House, and that this report ought to be considered sufficient. The only province of the Judiciary Committee would be to consider the form of this resolution—whether it is in proper form for incorporation in the Constitution; whether it complies with the constitutional provisions with reference to amendments.

Now, that matter is easily settled; and it really has been settled. I will state to members of the House that this resolution was submitted to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. KNOTT,] and I believe it meets his hearty approval, both as to substance and form. It has met with no objection.

A few words as to the importance of considering at present this unanimous report coming from the committee to whom the subject properly belongs. This winter the Legislatures of twenty-one States meet. Almost all of them will not meet again until two years from this winter; hence the importance of submitting the amendment to the State Legislatures this winter. These bodies meet generally on the 1st of January next. One State Legislature is now in session—perhaps two or three; but one has been in session since November, and will probably soon adjourn. To give this amendment the proper ratification two-thirds of the States must concur. Now, as gentlemen will see, it is no captious, unfair, or precipitate spirit that induces the committee to ask action upon it at this time.

Upon the merits of the question allow me to say a single word. Congress has acted upon the supposition that it had power to legislate upon trade-marks—to grant, regulate, and protect them. Since 1870 our legislation has proceeded upon the supposition that this power was included in the power of Congress to grant patents and copyrights. But the Supreme Court of the United States at its last term has decided that no such power is vested in Congress under the Constitution, either under the clause to which I have just referred or under the clause with reference to commerce or any other clause; so that all the legislation of Congress on this subject has fallen to the ground for want of constitutional power to enact it. In the exercise of this supposed power the Government has issued about eight thousand trade-marks and has received $211,000 in fees. All these trade-marks are now worthless so far as congressional action is concerned, and the money received by the Government as fees is without consideration, and in justice and equity will have to be refunded to the parties by whom it has been paid. Assuming Congress to possess this power, we have entered into treaties with the German empire, with France, with Belgium, with Austria, and other nations. I have some extracts from these treaties. These countries have national laws on the subject of trade-marks. They protect our trade-marks in their countries; and in these treaties we have agreed to protect their trade-marks. But I ask gentlemen to observe that the power to enforce these treaties would not give us the power to protect these trade-marks. I read the language of the treaty with the German Empire with reference to trade-marks.

We agree to give the same protection to the citizens of that empire that we do to citizens of this country. Under this decision of the Supreme Court we have no power to give protection to citizens of this country; and, therefore, we have no power to enforce that treaty in protecting the trade-marks of that nation with whom we have entered into a solemn treaty obligation to meet its concurrent action in that respect.

With France, the terms of the treaty are, "just as if the plaintiff were a subject or citizen of that country." We are to give them that protection. We have no power to give protection to citizens of this country, and therefore no power to give protection to citizens of France any more than to our own citizens.

In the treaty with Austria, the language is this: "Shall give to the injured party ground for such action or proceeding to prevent such reproduction, and to recover damages for the same, as may be authorized by the laws of the country in which the counterfeit is proven, just as if the plaintiff was a citizen of that country." We can give their citizens no protection because we can give our own none. We can give theirs only what we can give our own. So gentlemen will see this grant of power is important in reference to treaties with foreign nations.

It comes home to every man's district, to every man's constituents. I have no doubt there is not a single citizen represented upon the floor of this House who would not urge the immediate passage of this joint resolution. I have letters from various parts of the country urging this action. There is not a member of the House who has made a single objection to it. The form of the resolution is as it should be. I ask gentlemen who have opposed ordering the main question to be put not to carry that opposition to voting against the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ARMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this joint resolution, not because it does not come from the Judiciary Committee, but because I believe it to be totally unnecessary to amend the Constitution of the United States in order to attain the object which the gentleman from Iowa seeks.

It is true, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the present trade-mark law is unconstitutional. They place that decision upon the ground that Congress undertook to legislate on the subject of trade-marks under the wrong clause of the Constitution; that Congress undertook to assume jurisdiction over this subject under the clause which allows Congress to grant patents, to grant copyrights to the authors of books, &c. The Supreme Court have decided that a trade-mark has no affinity to patent-rights or to copyrights; and they indicate in that decision what I believe to be perfectly clear, that trade-marks come under the commerce clause of the Constitution, that clause which gives Congress power to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations.

I have had the honor to present a bill to this House which has been referred to the Committee on Commerce, which, I think, will avoid the constitutional difficulty and fully attain the end the gentleman desires.

Under that clause which allows Congress to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations, Congress has full power to protect trade-marks so far as they are used in interstate commerce and commerce with foreign nations. And this is all that is necessary. It is no more necessary for the Congress of the United States to protect trade-marks within the boundaries of a State than it is for them to protect the cattle trade of a State or the corn or cotton trade of a State. The law of the States and the common law fully protects a man's right to a trade-mark, and all that is necessary is for Congress to pass a law to protect trade-marks when used in commerce between different States and with foreign nations. My bill, I think, fully covers the ground and attains the end. I do not think it is best, whenever we find Congress lacks some power under the Constitution, to rush in with hot haste to give that power to Congress, without first inquiring whether it is necessary.

Mr. McCOID. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ARMFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. McCOID. Does not the reasoning of the decision of the Supreme Court cover the whole point that trade-marks cannot be regulated under the power to control commerce?

Mr. ARMFIELD. Not at all, as I understand it. I have read the decision, and understand they decided it is only unconstitutional because Congress attempted to regulate commerce within the boundaries of a State. The bill I have prepared, I will state to the gentleman, has been examined by some of the best lawyers of the United States, of both political parties, and every lawyer to whom it has been submitted is of the opinion that it will completely avoid the constitutional objection found in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and that it will insure all necessary protection to trade-marks.

Mr. SAMFORD. Where is it?

Mr. ARMFIELD. In the hands of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COX. It is very evident, Mr. Speaker, from the statement made by my friend from North Carolina and the statement of the gentleman from Iowa that this measure needs the revision of the Judiciary Committee. I think the bill of my friend ought also to be referred to that committee, which has its special function to look after these matters connected with constitutional interpretation.

I had something to do with the passage of this bill about trade-marks. It passed without much discussion. Whether it came under that clause in the eighth section about copyright, about authors and inventors, or whether it came under the clause as to commerce, it is no matter now, for the Supreme Court have decided these trade marks, as we at present legalize them, are not constitutional.

Then comes the further question that we have made treaties with foreign powers as to these trade-marks, guaranteeing them under certain conditions. The question arises, is a treaty the paramount law of the land? The Constitution says so. How far has that been interpreted so as to reach trade-marks? These questions need very careful judicial interpretation. This is a fresh decision of the Supreme Court, which comes in collision with a long line of decisions. We have received over $200,000 in payment of fees on this business. Our trade is being disorganized because of this decision. Let us, therefore, without passing on the merits of either of the bills, refer them to the Judiciary Committee, in order that we may have a judicial and judicious report. I will make that motion, if it be in order, directly.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, the only objection in private conversation that I have heard to this bill is that it comes from the wrong committee. Now, being a member of the Committee on Manufactures, I desire in the first place to speak for a moment on that point. When I came here I had an exceeding desire that I might get on a committee that should sound big and have little to do; and if our Speaker had the powers of a modern clairvoyant, he could not have hit my case better than he did. [Laughter.] Why, sir, every paper in my district has announced that I am on the important Committee on Manufactures. [Laughter.]

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I feel a little sensitive about this bill. It is the only child that committee has got, [laughter,] and, as near as I can learn, it is the only one they ever have had. [Renewed laughter.] In searching back through the records of that committee we have as yet been unable to find that for the last eighteen years there has ever been anything which was proposed by our committee that did not immediately take its flight to the Judiciary Committee. You can see, therefore, why I am naturally sensitive about this. We considered this an important bill, and if it is to be jeopardized by the fact that it is not in the hands of the right committee, I say we should transfer it in any way to get it in shape, because, if it is to do the country immediate good, it should be passed before the holidays, because the Legislatures are so soon coming together. I suppose every member of this House knows that the decision of the Supreme Court injured largely our great manufacturing interests all over the land. It is not sectional.

Mr. COX. My friend will allow me to make a practical suggestion. I think, from the vote already taken in the House, it is perfectly sure two-thirds will not vote for this measure without some more mature consideration. If my friend from North Carolina wants to kill this bill——

Mr. HORR. From where?

A MEMBER. He said from North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. No, from Michigan; but I can stand almost anything, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. My friend, I know his name——

Mr. WRIGHT. What is it?

Mr. COX. I do not want to say, sir. [Laughter.] I was about to suggest to my friend from Michigan that if he wants the bill really passed so as to submit it in time to the State Legislatures—if he wants to relieve the great industry bound up with these trade-marks—he had better allow it to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the last vote we have had indicates his bill may be throttled—that this little bantling may be considered illegitimate. [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. The gentleman should not forget that the vote was taken before I made this explanation. [Laughter.] There is hardly anything I would not yield to my genial little friend from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I waive size. [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. But I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, but his suggestion is a wise one. While we on the Committee on Manufactures, so far as I know, have for this bantling the affection of a parent, we still are willing to yield anything for the sake of its passage. As my friend from Iowa stated, there have already been collected over $200,000 of fees which are now declared, perhaps, illegally collected. Our Government may be asked to refund money paid for something which it could not grant. I do not believe there is a gentleman on either side of this House who does not believe it best that our General Government should have some control over this business of trade-marks. I am not captious about it. What I want is that that course shall be taken which shall result in the passage of this bill, but I yield to older and wiser men in this House, who have had more experience than I have had, to determine what that course shall be.

I do not wish to embarrass the bill by seeking to drive it to a vote at an improper time. All I wish to say is that I believe the manufacturing interests of the country demand that a measure of this kind shall be passed now. I think the decision of the Supreme Court prevents any one absolutely from getting any protection on this question except what can be got by an action at common law. In most cases that remedy is worthless, because the damages in each case of violation are so slight.

The trespasses upon the law are so numerous that it is utterly impossible in that way to get your remedy and have it of any value to the interests that are affected by this law having been declared unconstitutional. I do hope the members of the House will see to it that the measure is not entirely killed here and now, for I believe we all want the same thing.

Mr. McCOID. I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman on my left, [Mr. ARMFIELD,] who supposes that his bill will bring this within the constitutional power of Congress by making it a regulation of commerce. The Supreme Court has expressly distinguished the difference between articles of commerce and trade-marks. A trade-mark is not an article of commerce. The question of transit from State to State or from nation to nation has no reference to trade-marks. The office of the trade-mark is to distinguish the goods of a certain manufacturer. Because the articles upon which a trade-mark is stamped are shipped in commerce, that does not give Congress the power to regulate a trade-mark; and the Supreme Court has made that express distinction. They refer to the very argument which has been used by the gentleman from North Carolina:

> The argument is that the use of a trade-mark—that which alone gives it any value—is to identify a particular class or quality of goods as the manufacture, produce, or property of the person who puts them in the general market for sale; that the sale of the article so distinguished is commerce. The trade-mark is, therefore, a useful and valuable aid or instrument of commerce, and its regulation by virtue of the above provision of the Constitution belongs to Congress, and that the act in question is a lawful exercise of this power.

Now they take that argument, and expressly say the trade-mark is not included:

> It is not every species of property which is the subject of commerce, or which is used or even essential in commerce, which is brought by this clause of the Constitution within the control of Congress.

They go on to give reasons to show that the power to control commerce does not give the power to control trade-marks. If the gentleman will read that portion of the decision on page 5 of the report he will find that clearly made out by the decision of the Supreme Court.

If I believed that was a good position which the gentleman takes I would see no necessity for passing this resolution. And further, if I believed that if the resolution were referred to the Judiciary Committee that committee would report back before the recess, I would have no objection to that course. If we could include that as an instruction to report back before the recess, or at the assembling of the House after the recess, and thus have some reasonable prospect that the resolution would pass in time to get to the Legislatures, I would not object.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that both these bills be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time. Whenever the committee come to an agreement they can report. I think the gentleman had better accept that.

Mr. McCOID. I am constrained to consent to something of that kind, because I do not wish to jeopardize the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is proposed that further proceedings under the ordering of the main question be vacated and that, by unanimous consent, this bill go, with a bill now in the hands of the Committee on Commerce, introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ARMFIELD,] to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to that committee to report thereon at any time. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2573) to authorize registration and protection of trade-marks; and the same was also referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to that committee to report on the joint resolution and bill at any time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FINLEY. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] is recognized.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy; and pending that motion I move that all general debate on the bill be limited to ten minutes. I will first yield, however, to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WARNER. Has that bill been printed?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have reported the bill from the Committee on Appropriations, and am instructed by the committee to ask that it be printed and recommitted.

The bill was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to.

> Resolved, That the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service be requested to furnish the House with a statement of all casualties and disasters to vessels officially reported to have happened on the great lakes within the scope of the operations of the Life-Saving Service since the commencement of the current fiscal year, including the estimated amount of property involved, the estimated amount saved, the estimated amount lost, the number of persons on such vessels, the number of persons saved, the number of persons lost, together with a statement of the services rendered by the life-saving crews and appliances during the same period on said lakes.

HARBOR OF REFUGE AT SAND BEACH, LAKE HURON.

Mr. CONGER. I present a communication from the Engineer Department, regarding the disaster at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, during a recent storm, for reference to the Committee on Commerce, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
26 Washington avenue, Detroit, Michigan, December 3, 1879.

GENERAL: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your information, a copy of a report made to me by my civil assistant at the Sand Beach (Lake Huron) harbor of refuge, on a great disaster, entailing loss of life and property, during the storm of November 19 and 20, 1879.

I beg leave to state, in this connection, that on January 31, 1876, I addressed a communication to the Chief of Engineers, in which I inclosed a draft of an act for the government of this harbor. In reply to this I received a letter from the office of the Chief of Engineers, dated February 10, 1876, asking for the reasons why such an act should be passed. To this I replied by letter, dated February 12, 1876. Since then I have referred to the necessity for a harbor master in my annual reports for 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1879.

Harbor masters are found necessary at all places frequented by vessels, and certainly here one is necessary, where vessels come in only during rough weather, often in quick succession and in great confusion.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. WEITZEL,
Major of Engineers.

Brigadier-General H. G. WRIGHT.
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A., Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
26 Washington avenue, Detroit, Michigan, December 2, 1879.

GENERAL: In accordance with your instructions I submit the following report upon the disasters occurring at Sand Beach during the storm of November 19 and 20, 1879, based upon the statements of vessel captains and parties at Sand Beach:

The wrecked craft consisted of the tow-barges Prairie State and Wells, total wrecks, and the steam-barge Whiting, with schooners E. C. Hutchinson and Bahama, and the tow-barge Rayner, more or less damaged by pounding on the reef.

The barges Prairie State, Wells, and Rayner formed part of the tow of the steam-barge Salina, which tow entered the harbor about noon November 19, 1879, taking a position such as to effectually block the remaining portion of the east entrance. It was apparently compelled to take such a position on account of the presence of a number of schooners and barges anchored at the time across the east and northeast side of the harbor, it being impracticable to pull so long a tow between them.

The steam-barge Whiting, with schooners Hutchinson and Bahama in tow, entered the harbor about 5 p. m., and was compelled by the position of the Salina's tow to take a still more exposed position.

Shortly after the entrance of the Whiting and tow the wind shifted from west to nearly north, and suddenly increased to a very severe gale with snow. This shift of wind swung the tows around, and caused the tow-line leading from the Rayner toward the Salina to cross the bows of the Farwell, a barge at anchor, whereupon the line was disconnected from the Rayner, casting her, with the Prairie State and Wells in tow, adrift. Anchors were at once dropped, but failed to stop the barges after gaining headway in the heavy wind then blowing. These three barges were wrecked upon the reef, the Prairie State and Wells becoming at once total wrecks, with the loss of five lives. The final fate of the Rayner is yet uncertain.

The Whiting and tow dragged their anchors before the squall and sea to which they were exposed, and drifted on the reef. Being deeper draught, they grounded before reaching the breakers, where the light-draught barges were breaking to pieces.

The Whiting and tow have been pulled off in a damaged condition.

It seems to be the unanimous opinion of all vessel men who were present or have given the subject attention that the loss of life and property at Sand Beach was due entirely to the lack of control of the craft entering the harbor by a properly authorized harbor master, who would have compelled the craft which first entered to have taken positions far enough inside the harbor to have been entirely out of the way of craft entering afterward. There was ample room under the protection of the completed work for all to lie in safety.

This condition of affairs which, in connection with a sudden and heavy squall, led to such loss of life and property is but a repetition of the jam on the east side of the harbor that frequently occurs from vessels and tows dropping anchor across the east entrance, apparently with the idea of getting out easier. The sinking of the tug Urania inside the harbor, last summer, was due directly to just such a jam on the east side of the harbor.

It seems to be the opinion of prominent vessel men that a harbor master, without a tug of sufficient power to move a vessel from one anchorage to another, would be of little use, and they urge the importance of a Government tug in connection with the harbor master as indispensable to reliable efficiency. I will state, in this connection, that so long as the work of construction is carried on at Sand Beach by the system of hired labor, requiring a tug in the services of the Government, there would be little difficulty in making such a tug answer for both construction and harbor-master work, in case an independent tug could not be secured.

The dragging of the anchors over a portion of the harbor marked upon the lake-survey chart as "mud" suggests a re-examination of this bottom, which I shall undertake the present winter, if ice permits.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. P. GILBERT,
Assistant Engineer.

General G. WEITZEL,
Corps of Engineers, Detroit, Michigan.

WILLIAM A. COURTNEY.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3036) for the relief of William A. Courtney; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to reserve all points of order upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole, and it is too late to reserve points of order upon it.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was stated the other day that points of order must be reserved in the House.

The SPEAKER. That is while the bill is in the House. The two bills to which the gentleman undoubtedly refers were reported to the House from the Committee on Appropriations, and that was the time when points of order should have been reserved upon them. Where a bill has already gone to the Committee of the Whole it is beyond the province of any member in the House to reserve points of order upon it, for the bill is not in the House for that purpose. It is illogical to suppose that points of order can be reserved upon a bill while it is in Committee of the Whole. That must be done while the bill is in the House.

The motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] is that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Military Academy appropriation bill. Pending that motion he moves that all general debate upon the bill be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. WARNER. This bill has just now been laid on our desks for the first time. It is a bill for the appropriation of $1,000,000.

Mr. FORNEY. The gentleman is mistaken; only about $315,000.

Mr. WARNER. Well, the bill provides for appropriating over $300,000. There has been no time for its examination, and I think it should go over until to-morrow at least. I for one do not like to be called upon to vote for an appropriation of this amount without any opportunity whatever to consider it.

The SPEAKER. The remedy is for the House to vote down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. The first question is upon the motion to limit general debate in Committee of the Whole to ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. COFFROTH in the chair.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. WARNER. I insist upon the reading of the bill. We want a little time to consider it.

Mr. FORNEY. Very well; let the bill be read.

The Clerk then read the bill at length.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate upon the pending bill has been limited to ten minutes. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to make but a brief statement for the information of the committee in regard to this bill. It is similar to the one passed last year and the one passed the year previous for the same purpose. The total amount recommended to be appropriated by this bill is $314,919; the total amount estimated for by the Department is $398,132.66; the total amount appropriated by the bill of last year was $319,547.33; the amount recommended by this bill is $83,213.66 less than the estimates submitted by the Department.

By the bill of last year the sum of $150,000 was appropriated for the pay of cadets. It has been found that that amount is too small, and a sum sufficient to cover the deficiency will have to be included in the deficiency appropriation bill of this year.

The only change between this bill and the one of last year of any importance is the appropriation by this bill of $25,000 for the purpose of adding some twenty-four rooms to the cadet barracks. The report of the Board of Visitors shows that for the comfort and convenience of the cadets it is necessary to have one hundred and sixty rooms, and that there are now only one hundred and thirty-six. The Board of Visitors recommend that there shall be additional rooms constructed, and an appropriation is made in this bill for that purpose.

We also recommend the appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of completing the new hospital building. A similar amount was appropriated last year for that purpose. The total amount recommended by this bill is less than the amount appropriated by the bill of last year. When the bill shall be read by paragraphs for amendment, if any gentleman desires any explanation of the items I will give it if within my power.

Under the head of the law department a provision was added to one of the appropriation bills some four or five years ago authorizing the Secretary of War to assign a professor of law from the corps of judges-advocate. Your committee sees no reason why that provision should remain in force, and have changed it in this bill so as to give the Secretary of War a wider field from which to make the selection. He can still assign from the corps of judges-advocate as well as before, but his field by this bill is extended to all the officers of the Army.

If my friend from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] who was on the sub-committee that prepared this bill, desires to say anything upon the bill, I will yield to him.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to say but a few words. The Committee on Appropriations is substantially a unit in recommending the passage of this bill. It is true that the estimates of the Department for the Military Academy are $398,132.66, and that the bill recommends the appropriation of $314,919. There is therefore a difference of $83,213.66 between the amount estimated for and the amount recommended to be appropriated by the bill.

This amount consists very largely of certain items which are submitted by the Secretary of War for the consideration of Congress, but without any special recommendation, as is made for many other items. For instance, there is the sum of $8,480 in the item of pay to cadets. The Secretary of War estimates for three hundred and twelve cadets. If all the districts entitled to be represented under the law were represented, there would be three hundred and twenty-five cadets; but the committee thought that during the ensuing fiscal year there would not probably be more than two hundred and ninety-six in attendance; hence they recommend the appropriation of $160,000.

On page 148 of the estimates there is an estimate for building officers' quarters, for window sash and cadet barracks, and for replacing copper on roof, amounting in the aggregate to $29,505. The committee thought it best not to report an appropriation for these items, believing that the academy could get along without them for the ensuing year.

As has been stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] we do recommend an appropriation of $10,000 to continue the work on the hospital. The Secretary estimates $40,000 to commence the erection of cadet barracks; and the statement is made by the Board of Visitors as well as by the Superintendent in his report that this work ought to be done, for the reason that three students are frequently crowded into one quite small room. Upon full consideration, the committee recommend an appropriation not of $40,000 as estimated, but of $25,000 to commence that work.

So that of this amount of $83,000 less than the estimates recommended, $77,102.84, consists of these five or six items to which I have just referred, leaving a difference of only $6,110.32 on sundry items running through the bill. My own impression from the best examination I have been able to give is that the bill in the main is fair and liberal in its provisions. Perhaps there are some little items amounting to a few hundred dollars which the committee might well have given; but, taking the bill altogether, I think the academy will be able to get along during the next fiscal year with the appropriations recommended by this bill. Perhaps I ought to state that a deficiency may possibly occur in the appropriation for pay of cadets. If there should be more than two hundred and ninety-six cadets during the next fiscal year there would of course be a deficiency at the rate of $540 for each cadet, which would have to be provided for in a deficiency bill. This is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to know from the gentleman in charge of the bill what rank the commandant of cadets holds?

Mr. FORNEY. The present commandant of cadets is a major, but under the Revised Statutes it is provided that he shall have the pay of a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. WARNER. Then the $2,200 is to give him the pay of a lieutenant-colonel?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir; that is the calculation of the War Department. I called there this morning, and was informed that this is the pay he is entitled to receive under the Revised Statutes. The provision on the subject, which will be found in section 1334, on page 228, is this:

> The superintendent of the Military Academy shall have the pay of a colonel, and the commandant of cadets shall have the pay of a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. WARNER. In lines 20 to 22 I find this item:

> For pay of four assistant instructors of tactics, commanding companies, in addition to pay as second lieutenants, $2,400.

I wish to ask what is the rank of the assistant instructors?

Mr. FORNEY. They receive $600. Young officers are taken from the Army to act as these instructors; and it is said that $600 will cover the expenses of each.

Mr. WARNER. What is the rank of these instructors?

Mr. FORNEY. It is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War whom he will select; I believe they are second lieutenants.

The time allowed for general debate having expired, the Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The bill was read through.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to amend by striking out from the ninth to the twenty-sixth lines, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read by paragraphs for amendment, and it is not in order to go back.

Mr. SIMONTON. The announcement was made that the bill would be read by sections; there is certainly only one section in the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was the announcement. There is but the one section. The motion was to consider the bill by sections.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suppose nobody misunderstood the fact that the bill was to be considered according to the usual course, that is, by paragraphs. I do not recollect the precise form of speech used by the gentleman who made the motion.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood the gentleman to move the question in the only way in which he could be understood; that is, that the bill be read by sections.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not hear what the gentleman said. I take it for granted that it was understood in the way I have stated.

Mr. FORNEY. What is the motion?

Mr. McMILLIN. To strike out from the ninth to the twenty-sixth line, inclusive. My motion is not out of order, and I wish briefly to give my reasons for it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that the bill is not prepared by sections at all, but simply by paragraphs; it does not purport to be divided into sections.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is there more than one section in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced that the bill would be read by paragraphs. The present occupant of the chair does not remember what was the form of the motion on going into Committee of the Whole; but it was announced that the bill would be read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. The motion, as I understood, was that we go into Committee of the Whole, and that the bill be considered by sections.

Mr. FORNEY. We of course expected that whenever a paragraph should be read, any amendment desired to that paragraph would then be offered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that by fair construction——

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] is out of order. The direction of the Chair was that the bill be read by paragraphs.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to have the motion as taken down by the Clerk read to see what it was.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood that the bill was to be read through by paragraphs for amendment. It has been read through and that is the end of it.

Mr. SIMONTON. I hope the Chairman will direct the reporter to refer to his notes to see what actually occurred. If the gentleman was misled by the announcement of the Chair he should have an opportunity to move his amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COFFROTH reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FORNEY. I demand the previous question on the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to move an amendment before he demands the previous question.

Mr. FORNEY. I must insist on my demand.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARSENAL PROPERTY, CHARLESTON.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask, Mr. Speaker, for unanimous consent to report back favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs Senate joint resolution No. 26, to transfer the arsenal property in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute, for the use and accommodation of said school. The gentleman who objected yesterday has withdrawn his objection.

The joint resolution, which was read, is as follows:

> That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to lease and deliver possession, upon such terms and conditions as to him may seem best, for the use of or in the interest of the Government, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute, the property known as the "Arsenal," situated in the city of Charleston, State of South Carolina, together with all the buildings, rights, and appurtenances thereto belonging, to be had and held by said trustees for the use and accommodation of said school for such time as said lease may run, if not theretofore required by the Secretary of War.
> SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such terms and arrangements with said trustees for the care and protection of said property during its occupancy by said school, and for the redelivery of possession to the Government when thereto required, as will best subserve the interests of the Government: Provided, That the Government shall not be required to pay for any improvements that may be placed on said grounds during the continuance of said lease.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to know whether the entire power to revoke this lease resides in the Secretary of War?

Mr. DIBRELL. The resolution gives to the Secretary of War the right to lease the property under such terms as he sees proper, and the Government is not to pay for any repairs put upon it. I desire to say further that this is not a sectarian school nor a political institution nor anything of the kind. The Government vacates the property and allows it to be used by this school, and whenever the Government needs it again it has to be returned to the possession of the United States.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it of any use to the Government now?

Mr. DIBRELL. None at all.

Mr. DUNNELL. How long has it been in that condition?

Mr. DIBRELL. Troops were withdrawn in April. I ask the report of the Secretary of War be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> WAR DEPARTMENT,
> Washington, D. C., April 1, 1879.
> SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of your reference and commendation of the request of Rev. A. Toomer Porter for a lease of the arsenal property at Charleston, South Carolina, for the use of the Holy Communion Church Institute, I have the honor to inform you that I have obtained from the Judge-Advocate-General his opinion as to the power of the Executive to dispose of this property, and beg to inclose for your information a copy of the same herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. W. McCRARY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER,
United States Senate.

Mr. BARBER. Is there any limit of time when the Secretary may lease it?

Mr. DIBRELL. It is discretionary with him altogether, so that when the Government needs it again the lease ceases. He can close it whenever he chooses.

The report was received, and the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CONGER demanded a division on the passage of the joint resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 33.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. REAGAN, who is detained at his room by illness.

IMPRESSIONS FROM PORTRAITS AND VIGNETTES.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, the head of a department or bureau, art association, or library, be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish impressions from any portrait or vignette which is now, or may hereafter be, a part of the engraved stock of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing: Provided, That the party or parties applying for the same shall deposit in advance, with the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the cost price of said portrait or vignette and 10 per cent. additional.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, the head of a department or bureau, art association, or library, be, and is hereby, authorized to furnish impressions from any portrait or vignette which is now, or may hereafter be, a part of the engraved stock of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at such rates and under such conditions as he may deem necessary to protect the public interests.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GUNTER. I move to take up a bill from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time.

Mr. CALKINS. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I move the House adjourn.

LAMBERT WICKES.

On motion of Mr. HENRY, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Lambert Wickes, no adverse report having been made thereon.

AUGUSTINE HENNESY.

On motion of Mr. HARMER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Augustine Hennesy, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence from the 6th of January next to the 15th.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the governor of the State of California, transmitting, according to an act of the Legislature of said State, the result of the vote taken to ascertain the wishes of the people of California as to Chinese immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

And then (at three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. HOAR. I present a memorial from the Historical Society of Massachusetts, signed by Robert C. Winthrop, president, Charles Francis Adams, vice-president, and other gentlemen, well-known as distinguished historical scholars, in favor of the erection of a monument at Yorktown. The memorial is very short, and I ask that it be read, and that the names of the signers appear in the RECORD without being read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be reported at length.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, composing the council of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and by the order and in behalf of said society, respectfully represent:

That on the 29th of October, 1781, the old Congress of the United States passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the United States in Congress assembled will cause to be erected at York in Virginia a marble column, adorned with emblems of the alliance between the United States and his most Christian Majesty and inscribed with a succinct narrative of the surrender of Earl Cornwallis to his excellency General Washington, commander-in-chief of the combined forces of America and France; to his excellency the Count de Rochambeau, commanding the auxiliary troops of his most Christian Majesty in America, and his excellency the Count de Grasse, commanding in chief the naval army of France in the Chesapeake;"

That, on the 7th of November thereafter, the Congress adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of Foreign Affairs be directed to prepare a sketch of emblems of the alliance between his most Christian Majesty and the United States, proper to be inscribed on the marble column to be erected in the town of York under the resolution of the 29th of October last;"

That these resolutions have not yet been executed, or, certainly, the column has not been erected;

That less than two years remain before the one hundredth anniversary of the great crowning victory at Yorktown will become the subject of commemoration; and that, while it may already be too late for the completion of such a monument in season for that centennial celebration, there is still ample time for making provision for the laying of the corner-stone on the 19th of October, 1881.

The Massachusetts Historical Society earnestly desire that this pledge of the old Congress should be fulfilled, and that Yorktown may no longer be without a monument of the victory which brought to a triumphant conclusion the war for American independence commenced at Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill.

They therefore pray your honorable bodies to make a suitable appropriation for this long-deferred monument, to appoint a commission for procuring the design and executing the work, and to cause all necessary arrangements to be made for the laying of the corner-stone at Yorktown, Virginia, on the day of the centennial commemoration.

For the Massachusetts Historical Society:

ROBERT C. WINTHROP, President.
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Vice-President.
GEORGE E. ELLIS, Vice-President.
GEORGE DEXTER, Recording Secretary.
CHARLES DEANE, Corresponding Secretary.
CHAS. C. SMITH, Treasurer.
SAMUEL A. GREEN, Librarian.
WM. S. APPLETON, Cabinet-Keeper.
D. A. GODDARD,
WINSLOW WARREN,
CHARLES W. TUTTLE,

Executive Committee of the Council.

Mr. GARLAND presented the petition of C. W. Belknap and others, citizens of Monroe County, Arkansas, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Saint Charles to Indian Bay, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Kentucky, praying for a reconsideration of his claim for property seized by the United States authorities; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BECK. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting information in relation to an increase of the appropriation for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, with a view to the more effectual suppression of the illicit distillation of spirits, referred to that committee, and to move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as it deals with the subject of appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 44) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866; the bill (S. No. 246) for the relief of certain postmasters and late postmasters in the State of Kansas; the bill (S. No. 262) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, and the memorial of Harvey Spalding asking the passage of a law to enable certain postmasters and late postmasters whose pay has been withheld in contravention of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, to institute proceedings therefor in the Court of Claims, have instructed me to report a bill as a substitute for the bills named and in response to the memorial, and to submit a report thereon.

The bill (S. No. 903) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June, 1866, was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

RECUSANT WITNESSES.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report the following preamble and resolution, and to ask for their present consideration:

Whereas J. V. Admire, E. B. Purcell, George T. Anthony, Len. T. Smith, and Levi Wilson, citizens and residents of the State of Kansas, were duly served with subpœnas in the months of September and October, 1879, issued by the sub-committee of the Senate Committee of Privileges and Elections, then sitting in Topeka, in said State of Kansas, commanding each of them to appear before said sub-committee and then and there testify in reference to the subject-matters then under consideration by said sub-committee, to wit: charges relating to the election of JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from said State of Kansas; and

Whereas said Admire, Purcell, Anthony, Smith, and Wilson refused to appear and testify before said sub-committee as required by said subpœnas: Therefore,

Resolved, That an attachment issue forthwith directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him to bring said J. V. Admire, E. B. Purcell, George T. Anthony, Len. T. Smith, and Levi Wilson forthwith to the bar of the Senate to answer for contempt of a process of this body.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Had we not better make the writ returnable on the first day the Senate will be in session after the holidays?

Mr. SAULSBURY. We can give instruction to the Sergeant-at-Arms to follow the usual form.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is all right. I merely suggested it.

The preamble and resolution were agreed to.

D. M. HAMLIN AND A. F. SLADE.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report with an amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin, which has been passed by the House; and I ask that it may be read for information with the intention of asking for its passage this morning unless there is objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to D. M. Hamlin the sum of $56.25, the same being his salary as a member of the Capitol police force from the 8th to the 31st of July, 1879; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the amendment of the committee be reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we consider that, I should like to hear explained how it happens that the general appropriation does not provide for this man?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator will allow the amendment reported by the committee to be read, I will then explain. It will only take a moment to read it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations propose to amend the joint resolution by adding:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Andrew F. Slade the sum of $342.50, the same being for services as a riding-page of the Senate at the rate of $2.50 per day from the 17th day of July to the 30th day of November, inclusive, 1879; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, it appears that there was passed a joint resolution during the recent session to pay the employés of Congress one month in advance, which was complied with. One of the policemen of the Capitol left his position soon afterwards and another person took his place, and there has been no provision made for his payment. The man served part of a month, from the 8th to the 30th, and this $51 appropriated by the joint resolution as it came from the House is intended to pay the policeman for the time that he served and for which he could not be paid for want of an appropriation, because the person who left the service had been paid in advance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask if the person who took this man's place got the month's advance pay?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will bear in mind that I stated in the beginning that we passed a joint resolution at the recent session of Congress allowing the employés of the Senate and House one month's pay in advance. The old officer—I have forgotten his name—received the month's pay in advance and left the service. His place had to be filled, and this provision is to pay the man appointed in his place for the remainder of the month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is to pay the man who took the place?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that the result of the performance is that two men holding the same place are each to be paid in advance for that month?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no; not in advance. The man who took the place of the one who left the service has not been paid, and this joint resolution is brought in for the purpose of paying him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; so that the effect of the two operations will be, that on account of the discharge of the man who was in office at the time the Senate passed the resolution, he having got his pay, another man was appointed in his place, and now he is to be paid the month in advance. Is that it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not quite. The man was not discharged, but left his position after getting his month's pay. That is it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He did not perform any duty at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it amounts to paying two men in the same office for thirty days after the expiration of the session.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Twenty-one days I believe is the time.

Mr. WITHERS. It is to pay, not for the full time, but a portion of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes. I am merely getting at the principle of the thing, because I know we are proceeding upon high conservative principles now. I wanted to understand the propriety—as of course it must be proper—of paying two men this constructive pay for the same office for the same length of time. It must be right on the principles we are proceeding upon!

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The first man was paid and performed no duty at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand it perfectly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will state to my friend from Vermont that it results from paying a man in advance of the rendition of the service. Congress ordered it, as a friend on my left suggests, and this results from that mode of doing things.

Mr. McDONALD. When was that order to pay made?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Just previous to the adjournment of the extra session.

There is an amendment which will probably require a word of explanation. A riding page has been in service during the recess of Congress for the purpose of delivering messages and postal matter, who, from some cause or other, was omitted, and has not been paid, nor is he on the roll. The service having been performed, the committee thought it was right and proper that he should be paid for the time from July.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, the title of the joint resolution was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution for the relief of D. M. Hamlin and Andrew F. Slade."

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 910) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to introduce a bill that has been introduced in the House. I do so at the request of one of my constituents without any committal on my part as to the propriety of the bill passing.

By unanimous consent obtained, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 911) to declare the legal effect of permits granted by the President of the United States to purchase products of the insurrectionary States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. No. 1307) to establish a land district in the Territory of Dakota, and locating the office at Grand Forks;

A bill (H. R. No. 1336) for the establishment of a land office in the Territory of Montana; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1737) confirming grants of swamp lands made by the State of Minnesota in aid of the construction of railroads and other internal improvements.

The bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands, was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, I think. The first question is the propriety of abolishing the military reservation. Of course the chairmen of those two committees can suggest which is the proper reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were read severally by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 358) to provide for the appointment of an additional clerk in the western judicial district of North Carolina;

A bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern judicial district in said State;

A bill (H. R. No. 1241) to authorize the holding of terms of the United States district court for the district of West Virginia at Martinsburgh;

A bill (H. R. No. 1534) to exempt postal employés from serving upon juries; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern judicial district in said State.

The bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FEES OF OFFICERS OF COURTS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There is a concurrent resolution sent from the House in relation to the appointment of a committee to consider the fees of clerks of courts. I move that that be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint committee of three Senators and five Representatives be appointed to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, and emoluments allowed to the officers of the several courts of the United States to ascertain whether any, and if any, what, abuses now exist or have existed or may take place thereunder, and to report by bill or otherwise. That said committee shall have power to employ a clerk and the services of a stenographer, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and to report at any time.

ADVANCEMENT OF AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask that the resolution reported by me yesterday from the Committee on Agriculture be taken up and considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, reported by Mr. JOHNSTON from the Committee on Agriculture December 17th and submitted originally by Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia:

Whereas agriculture is the foundation of nearly all our wealth, and it is mainly through the exportation of its products that we are paying off our large indebtedness, foreign and domestic, and have the present large balance of trade in our favor; and

Whereas, although about one-half of the people of this country are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and all other interests are dependent upon this our leading and most important interest, commercial and otherwise, yet but little has been done by the General Government to promote agriculture, while other less general and important interests have been largely aided: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committees on Agriculture of the respective Houses be, and they are hereby, instructed to consider generally the subject of agriculture, and report, by bill or otherwise, what can or ought to be done by the General Government to better advance, encourage, and foster agricultural interests; and that said committees shall have the power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a resolution offered at this time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was reported yesterday from the Committee on Agriculture. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it was reported yesterday, the Senator has a right to move its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to object to the resolution. I suggest to the Senator who submitted the resolution that it is a very serious and a very improper precedent to authorize a committee to send for persons and papers for such purposes, especially a joint committee on most comprehensive subjects that do not involve any special investigation and inquiry of anybody in which any individual is concerned, and it puts all the private citizens and all the private papers of the country at the discretion of the tribunal so created. If that is to be done, certainly the same power should be lodged in the hands of every general and special committee of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the business of the morning hour is concluded and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] moves to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I think it had better go over.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rise to inform the Senator that it is presented in regular order and one objection, in my judgment, will not carry it over. However, if there is objection to the resolution and any Senator desires that it shall go over, I as the original mover of the resolution will not object to that course. A similar resolution passed the Senate at the last Congress. It was reintroduced at the extra session and referred to the Committee on Agriculture; it was considered by that committee and reported yesterday.

As to the latter part of the resolution empowering the committee to send for persons and papers, that is not material. The Senator who reported the resolution, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I believe does not care whether that clause remains or not, and I certainly do not care about it. The resolution is not intended to accomplish anything further than to make a general inquiry into the subject of agriculture, and I care nothing about the other portion of it. If the Senator from Massachusetts will make a motion to amend, that part may be stricken out so far as I am concerned.

But let me remind the Senator from Massachusetts that half the people of this country are interested in agriculture, and that it is no small interest. It is a matter that should receive careful and proper attention from Congress. I think it very queer that anything that would foster or aid a pursuit in which half the people of this country are interested and from which the Senator and myself get our bread, and without which we could not live long, should be objected to by any Senator.

Mr. HOAR. The honorable Senator's reproof I accept with some surprise when I remember that, after a long training in the service of the Committee on Agriculture, and having studied that subject very deeply, and set forth the importance of it so eloquently, having his choice whether he should have the charge of that great interest and devote his public life to its advancement, or the petty and inconsiderable interest of appropriations, the mere spending of public money, he selected the latter, and abandoned this vast agricultural field altogether. Therefore, it hardly becomes that Senator to lecture the rest of us for want of devotion to this great interest. My point, however, is, merely as a general matter of policy for the guidance of the Senate, that if any committee desire authority to send for persons and papers they ought to call upon the Senate, stating the particular investigations which they propose; and that it is not in accordance with sound policy to grant these general powers which allow any tribunal, no matter of whom composed, to send their mandate all over the country to put all the citizens and all the private papers of all the citizens in the country at their command, without any specific matter of investigation having been committed to them by the Senate.

I move to strike out the words "and that said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think the suggestion of the Senator is very good, and I have no objection at all to the amendment proposed by him to strike out that part of the resolution authorizing the sending for persons and papers. It does not ask to appropriate any money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, one word. The Senator from Massachusetts reminds me that I was a member of the Committee on Agriculture. If my recollection serves me right, he was a member also, but he has gone a little further in his desertion than I have. I am still a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and I think the Senator has gotten ahead of me in the matter of desertion a great way. He, I believe, was a member of that committee, but for some mysterious reason or other he is not a member of it now, so that the charge of desertion of agriculture is on that side of the Chamber, and not on this side.

As to the resolution, it was the intention of the mover of the resolution to make some effort for the further development and encouragement of agriculture. I think it has been neglected too long by each House of Congress, and I hope the day is not very distant when some member of the Senate will take the initiative, and go on to do what is justice to the farmers and agriculturists of this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate agree to the preamble?

The preamble was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss, by leakage or casualty, of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 26) to transfer the arsenal property in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute for the use and accommodation of that school; and,

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing payment of the salaries of the employés of Congress on the 19th of December, 1879.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to call up for action the resolution offered by me on Monday last in regard to the emigration of negroes from the Southern States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my friend from Indiana allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The pension appropriation bill was reported yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations, and the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] has it in charge. It will only take a few moments if the Senator from Indiana will allow that to be passed. It has passed the House, and has been reported favorably from the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. A pension bill always has precedence over any business with me.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am obliged to the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would have recognized the Senator from California at the conclusion of the morning hour for the purpose of moving that bill.

Mr. BOOTH. By the direction of the Committee on Appropriations I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, this bill came from the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member; it was reported unanimously, therefore I do not rise to oppose it. It is reported in accordance with the law, which requires the full amount named in it to be appropriated, according to the estimate of the Commissioner of Pensions, of the sum necessary to pay the pensions. By the indulgence of the Senator from Indiana I should like to say a few words about the system of pensions and the increased appropriations that Congress has seen fit to grant for the last few years.

The previous bill, the act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, appropriated $29,366,000. We passed an arrearages of pensions bill, which required $25,000,000 to be paid out. This bill appropriates $32,404,000, being $3,038,000 more than the act of last year. This increase is due to various causes, including recent legislation.

We now have on our pension list:

Army invalids	125,150
Army widows, children, &c	80,174
Navy invalids	1,844
Navy widows, children, &c	1,772
Surviving soldiers of war of 1812	11,621
Widows of deceased soldiers of war of 1812	21,194
Making the total on the list to-day	242,755

The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that at the end of the present fiscal year, at the same rate of increase that has taken place in the preceding nine months of this year, there will be 250,000 cases pending and not acted upon. The pension-roll was increased during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, 18,757 names, and at the same rate for the next year it will be increased between thirty and forty thousand names, showing that the pension-roll is rapidly increasing, and we are constantly enacting new legislation to increase it. Within the next decade, if the same rate of increase continues, the pension-roll will be doubled, and it will require from $60,000,000 to $80,000,000 annually to be appropriated for the payment of pensions.

This pension bill appropriates more money than the entire expense of our Government for any year during the first fifty years of our Government, which period includes the war of 1812 and all other wars up to about 1840. This bill appropriates more money for a single year than the revolutionary soldiers received from beginning to end. We are paying in a single year more money for pensions than the entire revolutionary roll cost the Government. We paid on account of pensions from 1791 to 1860, $78,602,925.01, and between 1800 and 1833, $27,689,134.51. From 1791 to 1870, the entire time our Government was in existence up to 1870, we paid $221,153,156.32 for pensions. In the last eight years we have paid $234,189,522.42, being nearly $13,000,000 more than was paid from the beginning of the Government up to 1870. Fifteen per cent. of the entire revenue of the Government is now being paid for pensions, and, as I said, the roll is increasing at a rapid rate.

The intention of my remarks is only to call the attention of the Senate to the vast amount being paid for pensions and the rapid increase of our pension-roll. I would not deprive any pensioner of his just dues. We ought to be fair to all and liberal to those who have been disabled in the military service of the Government; but there is another class of people, the tax-payers, for whom we ought to have some consideration. Therefore I think we should go a little slowly and consider what we are doing.

It is a fact I believe beyond doubt—I get it from high authority—that the United States is paying about the same amount for pensions that the rest of the world is paying. Great Britain paid in 1878 $12,795,685; France, $12,600,000; Germany, $4,236,855; Austria and Hungary, $627,610; Belgium, $742,000; making the entire amount probably about the same amount that the United States is paying for the present fiscal year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. THEODORE F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 819) to authorize the laying of a telegraphic cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1989) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

NEGRO EMIGRATION TO NORTHERN STATES.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I move to take up for consideration the resolution submitted by me on Monday last.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. VOORHEES on the 15th instant:

Whereas large numbers of negroes from the Southern States, and especially from the State of North Carolina, are emigrating to the Northern States, and especially to the State of Indiana; and

Whereas it is currently alleged that they are induced to do so by the unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens toward them in the South: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members of this body be appointed by its presiding officer, whose duty it shall be to investigate the causes which have led to the aforesaid emigration, and to report the same to the Senate; and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, compel the attendance of witnesses, and to sit at any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. VOORHEES. Let that be read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. WINDOM, as follows:

And be it further resolved, That in case said committee shall find that said exodus of colored citizens from the South has been caused by cruel and unjust treatment, or by the denial or abridgment of personal or political rights, they shall further inquire and report to the Senate, first, what, if any, action of Congress may be necessary to secure to every citizen of the United States the full and free enjoyment of all rights guaranteed by the Constitution; second, whether the peaceful adjustment of all sectional issues may not be best secured by the distribution of the colored race through their partial migration from those States and congressional districts where, by reason of their numerical majority, they are not allowed to freely and peacefully exercise the rights of citizenship; and third, that said committee inquire and report as to the expediency and practicability of providing such Territory or Territories as may be necessary for the use and occupation of persons who may desire to emigrate from their present homes in order to secure the free, full, and peaceful enjoyment of their constitutional rights and privileges.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I have no purpose to detain the Senate at all upon this subject. I only desire to say in explanation of the course I have pursued that it has been taken from mature consideration. Some months since, nearly a year ago, when the question of migration from the South to the North on the part of the colored people first attracted the attention of the country, I, like others, was disposed not to attach much importance to it, and certainly not much so far as Indiana was concerned. Until recently I held the opinion that it was not a matter of great importance. I find, however, that there is a systematic, determined movement going on of no small dimensions. Large numbers of these people are passing through this city; some of them become stranded here and have to rely on private and public charity to carry them on. It becomes a matter of serious consideration, therefore; and if it be true, as is alleged in many of the newspapers of the country, that these people are being driven from their homes in the South, where they and their ancestors have lived for more than two hundred years, by the injustice and cruelty of the white people there, that fact cannot be known too soon. If, on the other hand, there is a conspiracy on the part of disreputable people, both white and black, to disturb the condition of the black race at the South and make them discontented and unhappy, to point out to them greater advantages elsewhere which do not exist, thus spreading a delusion and a snare before them, getting them to move about, that had better be known, for the exposure of it will be the way to stop it.

This resolution that I have introduced is offered in the utmost good faith, hoping that it will accomplish a good object.

I am told—whether that be the fact or not is one of the matters of inquiry—that upon one farm, a large farm in North Carolina, of some twenty-five hundred acres, there were sixty families residing until quite recently, a few weeks ago, residing contentedly as far as anybody knew, undisturbed as far as anybody knew. They have all gathered up in a sudden sort of hegira and started off to the North, except five families. Fifty-five families have gone.

Now, sir, as to what may be done in Indiana, I am not going to speak. I say for Indiana that it is a broad-hearted, liberal State. We will accept everybody who comes there, black, or white, or red, who comes there in the natural and legitimate order of things; but we no more want this population colonized upon us in large squads, battalions, regiments, divisions, and corps than the people of California want the Chinese landed upon them through organized societies of emigration. What we object to is not to black people coming to Indiana legitimately and orderly in the natural way of emigration, but we do object to Indiana, and every Senator will object for his own State, to its being pointed out and designated as a field for emigrant aid societies to operate upon. If that be going on in Indiana against the people of Indiana, for political purposes or any other purpose, the sooner it is known the better, for it can result in nothing but evil to these people. As a measure of humanity to these deluded people, the sooner it is stopped the better.

Indiana is the fifth State in this Union, well populated, thickly settled. We have no public waste-lands for people to take up cheaply. We have our settlements already made. Of course there is room for more, but no pauper population need expect to find unoccupied lands to squat upon in the State of Indiana. We have laws that protect the black race that is already there, and nothing could be more fruitful of evil to the well-behaved and decent colored population of Indiana than this so-called exodus of this kind of population from the South. I have no hard words to utter of them; but if people who get as far from home as Washington City is from North Carolina and here become stranded without means to get further on expect to acquire rapid fortunes and fulfill visionary plans in their minds when they reach Indiana, they will be wofully mistaken. There are no large vacancies in our fields asking for labor, either. We have fields of labor there, as well, however, supplied by our own people as are those of any other State in this Union. If there are agents going South saying to the negroes down there that they can get so much per day for cultivating land and various things of that kind in Indiana, the sooner these unfortunate people are undeceived the better for them.

Therefore I say, Mr. President, that not as a party measure, but as a measure of justice and humanity, I offer this resolution to have a little investigation. If I were actuated by purely political motives I would welcome this negro emigration. If I desired simply the success of the democratic party in Indiana, I would say to the agents of this movement, "put in a few thousand," and for every one thousand black men you put in there between now and next May—which I believe is the limit, for from May to November is six months, and that is the length of residence that gives a man a right to vote in our State—"we shall gain five thousand votes." I would say, "Bring them on," and the reaction will take care of all political consequences. There is nothing in this movement that benefits any party except the democratic party, so far as its effect on politics is concerned; but I do sincerely believe that there is a movement going on hurtful to the colored race, injurious to them, and liable to bring about those collisions of prejudice in the Northern States that are prejudicial to both races.

Mr. President, a word in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] Whatever may have been the spirit that dictated his remarks in regard to my motive, I pass that by. Whether his remarks were in compliment or otherwise, matters not. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota undertakes to instruct the committee in advance. It is to the effect that if the committee finds so and so then they shall be instructed thus and so. I think the better plan is for the committee to ascertain the facts, and then be subject to instruction upon those facts. I think the Senate can instruct the committee in its further duties better after the facts have been ascertained than upon a supposed and hypothetical case in advance. If we find that these people are being driven from their homes in North Carolina and Mississippi and elsewhere by the unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens, then it will be for the Senate, upon a full exposition of the case, to give the committee further instructions. I think, however, with all respect to the Senator from Minnesota, that his amendment is premature, for the reason I have stated.

Before taking my seat I will say that upon the suggestion of a Senator, for which I am very greatly obliged, I shall ask leave to strike out the words "compel the attendance of witnesses," because all the power of the committee is contained in the words preceding that clause, giving power to send for persons and papers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. VOORHEES. I modify it by striking out that clause.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified; and the question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. WINDOM. Only a word or two, Mr. President. When the honorable Senator from Indiana introduced his resolution the other day I was extremely gratified, and took occasion to say so to the Senate. I do not know how the Senator could possibly imagine that my remarks were intended otherwise than as a compliment. The Senator had proposed to institute an inquiry which I thought of very great importance. The proposition seemed to be in the interest of persons who had been driven from their homes by cruel and unjust treatment. After reciting the fact that large numbers of negroes were emigrating from the South, and especially from North Carolina into Indiana, his resolution says:

Whereas it is currently alleged that they are induced to do so by the unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens toward them in the South.

The ground upon which he bases his proposed inquiry is the current allegation that these things are true. From facts which I have received during the last twelve months, I am disposed to think that the allegation is well founded in many cases. As the Senator based his resolution upon these reports I assumed that similar information to what I had received had come to his ears, and moved his well-known sympathies on behalf of the oppressed, and that his action in this matter was with the intent to expose such violation of justice, and denial of personal rights, and to provide some remedy for them, if proven to exist. His resolution, however, did not go to that extent. It simply proposed the inquiry as to whether these wrongs existed, and whether they were the cause of the exodus from the South, which everybody knows has assumed very considerable proportions. I thought it best to make it practical, and by the amendment proposed that—

In case said committee shall find that said exodus of colored citizens from the South has been caused by cruel and unjust treatment, or by the denial or abridgment of personal or political rights—

the committee shall then proceed to inquire further as to three practical points. First, as to whether Congress cannot do something to protect American citizens in their constitutional rights. Second, as to what will be the probable effect of this voluntary distribution of the colored population upon the sectional issues which have disturbed the country. The third clause of my amendment—and I ask the attention of the Senator from Indiana particularly to that—was designed expressly to aid the Senator in averting what he fears will be a great evil to his State, to wit, that in case the committee upon investigation shall find that these people are driven from their homes by cruel and unjust treatment or by a denial of personal and political rights, they shall then proceed to inquire and report as to the expediency and practicability of providing some Territory or Territories of the United States to which they can go where such rights and privileges will be secure.

Mr. President, the Senator intimates that somebody is seeking to bring these colored people into Indiana for partisan political purposes. If that be true, will not the Senator join me as cordially in the inquiry which I propose to make as I will join him in the inquiry which he proposes? When we shall have ascertained through this committee that these people are compelled to emigrate by the causes upon which he bases his inquiry, shall we not inquire whether they cannot go to some place where they will not meet with the objections which the Senator says exist in Indiana? If it be a political movement that the Senator fears, the proposition which I make will relieve it from all danger in that direction. The original proposition upon this subject made by myself about a year ago was not that these people should be induced to go to any State of the Union unless invited to do so, but that we should inquire as to the expediency of providing a Territory for them where they would not encounter the prejudice of which the Senator speaks. I believe there is a portion of the Indian Territory that could be set aside for them, and organized in a way to avert all these difficulties. I want the Senator from Indiana to join with me in that investigation. I will vote with him most freely to inquire as to the causes of this great movement. I believe it has assumed proportions sufficiently important to justify, nay, to demand of Congress that some inquiry should be made. But I do not want our action to stop with the mere inquiry as to its causes without attempting any practical relief in case they should find that this movement is caused by the grievous wrongs of which complaint is made.

The political point which the Senator suggests strikes me as being a little peculiar. I know that his democratic friends in the Southern States where these negroes come from are not pleased with the exodus. They want them to stay there, and it is somewhat surprising that the democracy of Indiana should be so displeased with their advent into that State. There seems to be a little division of the democratic party upon that subject. I am surprised, especially in view of the fact that we have always heard that the unanimous southern vote during the last few years was because all the colored people had suddenly come to the conclusion to vote the democratic ticket in those States instead of being prevented from voting at all, as some uncharitable persons have suggested. If these be democratic colored people that our democratic friends from the Southern States dislike so much to part with, why is it that our democratic friends from Indiana so much object to their coming there?

But if both object to their going to Indiana, then let both sides join with me in the inquiry proposed by my amendment as to whether some other place cannot be provided for them, where they will cease to be a terror and a menace to democracy.

I will join with the Senator in voting for his resolution, and I call upon him to assist me in passing the amendment.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say one word upon this resolution. For myself I would say that I am getting tired of all these congressional investigations. It seems to be the fashion of late to appoint an investigating committee of either House of Congress to investigate anything that anybody charges or suspects has happened in any part of the United States. Still, I will not object to the passage of the resolution under the circumstances surrounding me. I will neither approve nor oppose it. Nevertheless my opinion is that this is an evil, if it be an evil, which will settle itself as a great many other evils are settled by time and the good sense of the people. One thing is very certain: the colored man is no longer a ward; he is of age; he does not need a guardian; he must take care of himself, and there is not a man in the whole South that I know of who will not cheerfully admit that the colored man has a perfect right to go where he pleases and settle where he pleases, and follow just such pursuit as he pleases, and nobody that I know of interposes the slightest obstacle in all the Southern States to his free migration or emigration and immigration anywhere.

I know it is customary and has become a common political vocabulary for politicians to talk about the cruel and unjust treatment of the colored people by the southern whites. There is not a particle of foundation for it, and there never was any foundation for it. It was simply intended from the beginning for political capital. Of course I know my friend from Indiana has not used it for that purpose, nor will I charge that the Senator from Minnesota has used it for that purpose; but that is the purpose for which it is used by the newspapers of the country and by the republican politicians generally.

Now, sir, here is a fact that this country ought to know: the colored people of the Southern States are perfectly contented with their situation exactly in proportion to the length of time they have been under the government of what are known as the white people of that country, or the democratic party, if you choose that term. They are contented and prosperous in exact proportion to the length of time they have been free from what we call the carpet-bag governments of those States. Take my own State. We have been free from that government now for eight years. The carpet-bag government or republican government obtained in that State for four years. They lost one year of their lease by fleeing the country. They actually ruled for three years after the military government ceased. What was the result? There was no school fund; there was not a single colored person in all that State educated at the public expense. The democratic party has had possession of that government now for eight years. What is the result? The first year they obtained possession there were six thousand colored children at the public schools. They have increased every year until, in 1878, we had sixty-eight thousand colored children in school at the public expense from taxes raised chiefly by the white people of that State—sixty-eight thousand in public schools and four thousand at private schools, making seventy-two thousand in all. I speak in round numbers. In addition, we have a colored college, at which there are now a large number of pupils, and to which the democratic Legislature for every year appropriates $8,000 from the public treasury. We have several hundred colored teachers, educated for the purpose of teaching in the schools at the public expense, and I am informed the school commissioner thinks the number of colored children that will attend the public schools at the public expense in the year 1879 will be found to approach ninety thousand. Then, in eight years we have increased the number of colored children from nothing to ninety thousand, educated at the public expense during the time that the white people or the democratic party have had possession of the government.

Now, take another chapter. During the period those people (the republican adventurers) had possession of the Government—I will not say the republican party, I am not making a partisan speech; I am stating facts of history, facts of history shown by the public records of that State during the three years the carpet-baggers, as we call them, had possession of the government of Georgia—the colored people accumulated nothing, nor did the whites; all values were uncertain, all property was uncertain, everybody was dissatisfied, nobody, black or white, knew whether anything could be made or would be made or ought to be made in the way of accumulation. Everything was uncertainty and gloom with all races. But there was a change in government. What is the result? Both races began at once to prosper. As I have said, that government has been changed for eight years, and by the tax-books of 1878 the colored people of Georgia alone have returned under their own oaths for taxation property exceeding $5,000,000—between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000—that they have accumulated. In what does this property consist? It consists largely in city property and largely in real estate, in land, and they have some $73,000 of money loaned at interest. They have a large amount of personal property.

Mr. CONKLING. How did they get it, if I may inquire?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. They acquired it, they made it, they worked for it under the protection of a democratic State government. It was not stolen from them. How could they get it otherwise than by working for it?

Mr. CONKLING. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I will explain my question. I have heard so often in these disquisitions upon the inferiority of race that a black man never would work and never could be made to work unless he was a slave, so that somebody could compel him to work, that I was curious to know whether of their own accord, voluntarily, the colored people of Georgia had amassed a surplus of $5,000,000, at an assessed valuation, and something more. Therefore it was that I ventured to interrupt my honorable friend, full of information upon the subject as he seems to be.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The motive of the Senator from New York was entirely correct, and I am glad that he asked the question, and I repeat that the colored people of the State of Georgia have accumulated between five and six million dollars, about six millions really, but they return for taxation five millions. They have accumulated it by their own labor; they have accumulated it honestly; and they have accumulated it because they have lived under a government in which they had confidence and which gave them complete protection in their earnings.

Now, I want to state another fact which is remarkable, and I think the gentlemen on the other side will be glad to hear it, and the whole country ought to be willing to know it, and that is that these colored people in the State of Georgia have returned for taxation over a half million acres of land—over five hundred thousand acres of land which they hold in their own right and which they have accumulated during the time and in the manner stated.

I state these facts for the purpose of showing you that so far from the charges which are made that the white people of the South are inimical to the colored race and treat them cruelly and unjustly being true, the reverse is the truth. When the men who went there for no other purpose but to use the poor negro to procure political office he did not accumulate property, his children were not educated.

Now, I will say this in answer to what the Senator from New York has said. He has heard it said, he informs us, for years that the colored people would not work unless under a master. The colored people are like all other people as we now find them; some of them will work, some of them will not. I concede that there are in Georgia as everywhere else a large number of unthrifty colored people; they generally accumulate about the cities and towns and villages, and they give the country a great deal of trouble and annoyance, no doubt about that, where they are in large numbers. Every southern man knows that, and every man who has traveled in the South knows it to be true. This discontent, this fever of emigration almost always originates with that unthrifty class, with that worthless class. I have myself ever since the war been employing colored people on farms. I know their habits well. I know that those who are on the plantations are at work accumulating property, accumulating land, becoming often themselves proprietors of land. There is no discontent with them. They have absolute protection, just as absolute protection as the whites around them. But among this worthless, unthrifty set that do not wish to work, that gather about the cities and towns and live from hand to mouth, always restless and discontented, you can get up trouble readily, and with them the trouble chiefly exists.

It is not owing to cruel treatment. They are creatures who become discontented and dissatisfied of their own motion, and of course they are available for parties who have designs in using them. This fever of emigration, I shall never forget, obtained in Georgia about the time of the change of our government from the republican to the democratic party, and I do not speak it in any partisan sense. I am merely speaking of the fact. When we passed from the carpet-bag government to the home government, to the proper government, about the time of the change from the one to the other in that State, this fever of emigration obtained there. I was in the midst of it, saw it. Nobody obstructed it. The white people generally encouraged it very little and discouraged it very little. Some were willing for the negroes to go, others preferred that they should not go. A large proportion of our people, I think, have concluded that the colored man is the best laborer that we can get for cotton, rice, and sugar, and in the malarial districts I believe they are the best labor we can get, and our people are perfectly willing that they shall remain. But since they have had good government, since they feel perfectly protected in all their rights, since every year they are accumulating property, and have every year their accumulations increased; since every year they find an increasing number of their children going to school and educated at the public expense, they have become just as well contented as the white people, and I have no doubt will go on prosperously.

Mr. President, upon this subject we all ought to banish everything like personal and political feeling. For one, I am a southern man; I was raised in the South, raised under slavery. I was raised to believe it was right, and believed it from my youth. I believe now that no laborer was ever better protected and cared for than the southern slave. I was one of those southern men who believed that the sudden emancipation of the whole negro race would destroy them and destroy our society; I honestly thought so. A large portion of the northern people thought so; the great body of them thought so; the wisest men that ever lived in the North then thought so; we all did; but I confess I was mistaken. The great evils we apprehended from sudden emancipation have not come. The southern people see this, and would not re-enslave the negro if they could. I freely confess that the colored man makes a better citizen with the advantages he has had than I had expected him to make. I confess that he is becoming more self-sustaining, more progressive in education and wealth than I expected, and I rejoice at it, and our southern people encourage him by all means possible, and to this encouragement he chiefly owes his success. A large proportion of them, I admit, are worthless, but the largest proportion are valuable both to themselves and to the community in which they live. They will improve still more rapidly if wicked intermeddlers will cease to disturb them for party purposes.

My own estimate is that more than one-half of the colored people of Georgia vote the democratic ticket. Are you surprised at it? Can any man be surprised at it? During the time of the carpet-bag government they were made to believe that if their old masters, as they were called, obtained possession of the State government they would all be put back into slavery. They have been taught differently; they know differently by actual experience, and as they have learned differently, and find they are getting the most perfect protection they could ask, are prospering to an extent that no similar number of colored people ever prospered in the history of the world, are accumulating more property, are being educated to a larger extent in proportion to population than you can find in any other country on this globe. They are not only contented, but they vote voluntarily, cheerfully, and willingly to sustain in the State government the party that has given them this protection, and under which protection they have been thus able to prosper.

Now, I say the people among whom this colored population live have more interest in their peace, more interest in their quiet, more interest in their prosperity than any other people. We cannot hope to prosper unless these colored people are encouraged and helped, and we are acting upon that, and we have more interest than any other people.

I dare say that this question, like all others, must be left to time, left to those influences that govern human action, and you will find in a short time that the condition of the colored man will be improving everywhere. Still, under the circumstances, while I do not myself feel that there is any necessity for the investigation, if anybody supposes there is good cause for an investigation which will develop the necessity for legislation I will not object. I do not feel like getting up here and saying that I will vote against investigation when it is bruited around that this emigration is caused by unjust and cruel treatment on the part of the white people. I know that that is not true. I know that it is utterly false. I know that if any disinterested committee will go down there they will find that the colored people are prospering, as I said, everywhere in exact proportion to the length of time they have been under democratic rule, and they are perfectly free to vote as they please, and they vote the democratic ticket as freely as I do, and for the same reasons in the main. The worst enemies of the colored people are those politicians who are forever seeking to use them to keep alive sectional passions for party advantage.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has said several times that he tries to be impartial about this matter; that he does not wish to cherish any personal or partisan feelings about it. After hearing the Senator say that once or twice, while he was talking about how much land, how much property these people had accumulated, I feared that he was going to fail altogether in being as impartial as he meant to be. It seemed to me at that point that he was really in danger of getting into partisan politics. But when he came to allude to the performances in Georgia by which political power has gone from one party to the other, and described it as a change from carpet-bag government to home rule, then I saw that he was absolutely and judicially impartial! Nobody could doubt that; and when he describes what had taken place in that State and has resulted in the overthrow of the republican party and the installation of the democratic party as a change from carpet-bag government to home rule, he is so free from feeling on this subject that whatever he says is likely to be entirely impartial. Having congratulated the Senator upon that, and not meaning to participate in this debate, I make a request, which I rose for the purpose of making, and which is to be allowed at the request of a solicitor in this city who writes me a note, to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Patents.

[By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill for the relief of Edgar Huson, which will be found among the "Bills Introduced."]

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I want to say to the Senator from New York that I try to be impartial. I think I am impartial; but I am compelled to tell the truth; and when I tell the truth it discriminates thoroughly against what we call the carpet-bag government.

Mr. CONKLING. I congratulate the Senator on having succeeded in being impartial. I prefaced the very important purpose for which I rose with that congratulation. That was all. [Laughter.]

Mr. VOORHEES. A single word, Mr. President, in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota. I have stated to the Senator my own opinion fully; that is, that it is premature. I do not object to the scope of the inquiry embraced in his amendment; and I am willing for the Senate, without any further remark upon its merits, to vote upon the question whether the resolution which I have offered shall be amended by the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, or not.

I can only say in response to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that he, of all men, ought not to object to a movement like this for investigation, for at the very start it has elicited from him most valuable information on the subject; and if the agitation of this question had accomplished no other result than the forcible statement which he has made in regard to the condition of the colored man in Georgia, it would be worth the trouble I have bestowed upon it. I am ready to vote on this question.

Mr. WINDOM. Allow me to express the hope before the vote is taken that the very flattering representation made by the Senator from Georgia as to the prosperous condition of the colored race will somewhat remove the fears of my friend from Indiana as to their becoming citizens of his State.

Mr. VOORHEES. I believe the colored people, if left alone, and not operated upon by improper influences, would everywhere be as they are in the State of Georgia. Whether that be so or not I want to inquire. I only know that there is an unnatural and, as it seems to me, improper movement on the part of the colored race in other places and toward other localities. That is the matter I wish to inquire into. I do not wish to go into discussion at this stage. I do not wish to make statements about matters which are to be subjects of inquiry; therefore I have restrained myself from saying more than I have.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senate will bear in mind in voting on this amendment that the inquiry suggested by my amendment is wholly based upon the event that the committee shall find that this movement is caused by cruel and unjust treatment, or by the denial or abridgment of political rights. The Senator from Indiana says it is premature. I think that if the investigations of the committee shall show these facts, and they shall so find, the sooner we make the additional inquiries proposed the better. I think it is not by any means premature.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARLEY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] Were he present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. GARLAND, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on all political questions. I do not know whether this is a political question or not, but if he were here, I should vote "yea" on the amendment.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. WALKER.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. McPHERSON. On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.] If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. GARLAND. My colleague [Mr. WALKER] is absent on a duty assigned him by the Senate. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were present.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have been requested to announce a pair between the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] and the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] I do not know how they would vote if they were here, but I announce the pair.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Indiana to insert after the words "unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens toward them in the South" the words "and by the denial or abridgment of personal and political rights and privileges;" so as to make the preamble read:

Whereas it is currently alleged that they are induced to do so by the unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens toward them in the South, and by the denial or abridgement of personal and political rights and privileges.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is, that it is so alleged?

Mr. WINDOM. Yes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I see no objection to accepting it in that form.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall vote for the resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana, and hope it will pass; but I want to state in a single sentence the logic of the vote just taken. It is this, that even if this committee shall find that these people are compelled to leave their homes by reason of unjust and cruel treatment or by reason of the denial or abridgment of personal or political rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution, yet the committee shall not inquire as to any remedy for those grievous wrongs, and that the committee shall not inquire itself or report to Congress whether any remedy can be provided.

The second point is this: Although the Senator's constituents are opposed to the immigration of this class of people into Indiana, yet he will not even inquire as to the expediency of providing any other place for them, notwithstanding the fact that his committee may find that they are actually driven from their present homes by injustice and cruelty.

Now, Mr. President, so far as any political purpose is concerned, I think we have shown by the vote on this side of the Chamber that we have no such motive. If, as the Senator insinuated in the outset, this movement is with a view to colonization in any State for a political purpose, the vote given unanimously on this side of the Chamber shows that the republicans of the Senate do not propose to encourage the effort to carry any State by such colonization. If anybody is responsible for such emigration to the Northern States it is the democrats of the South, whose conduct compels the negroes to leave their homes, and the democracy of the North, who refuse even to inquire as to the practicability of supplying some other place for the victims of persecution and oppression by their party friends.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the Senator well knows that when I was on my feet I stated that my objection to his amendment was simply that it was premature. I did not object to the matter of it; I objected to it because it presupposed a state of facts which is not yet ascertained, and thereupon proceeded to instruct this committee. Now, I tell the Senator in the plainest language I can use, that if the facts should be so, and it should be ascertained that these people are driven from their homes by unjust or cruel treatment or by a denial of their rights on the part of their white fellow-citizens, I will be as ready as he to inquire as to and apply a remedy. It is only a question of time. When this committee, if one shall be raised, reports its findings to this body, then I say to the Senator from Minnesota that his resolution amending the one which I had the honor to offer will be free from any objection whatever on my part, and I presume on the part of this side of the Chamber. The objection to his resolution was that it presupposed a state of facts which I say must first be found and laid before the Senate, and then let the Senate instruct this committee to ascertain the proper remedy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

Mr. WINDOM. It was accepted, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the preamble it is proposed to add the words:

And by the denial or abridgment of their personal and political rights and privileges.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the power to make these inquiries, if they are to be made at all, as I understand, comes under the provision in the Constitution that empowers Congress to propose amendments to that instrument. From the face of this resolution I am at a loss to know what Congress could do if they found any state of facts in reference to this alleged condition of things; but the power of inquiry under the right to propose amendments to the Constitution must necessarily be unlimited, or, if not unlimited, it cannot be very well restricted, for it is not for us in advance to determine what state of facts will come before the Senate and what will be the conclusion in the mind of the Senate upon that state of facts. Therefore in all investigations of this character it is important that the inquiry be as broad as possible. While not objecting to this investigation under any state of case, in view of this power in Congress and in view of the fact that the inquiry should be broad and fair, involving, if possible, and taking within its range everything any Senator may suggest, I favored the first amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota and was in hopes it would be unanimously adopted, for I cannot see how it is possible for the Senate in making an inquiry of this sort to restrict its committee, either by a positive or by a negative vote. Let us waive for the time being the consideration of the pertinency of this inquiry, of what may or may not be proved before this committee; when a Senator rises and proposes an amendment that upon a certain state of the case certain actions may be based, which state of the case we have all persistently and consistently denied, yet if it be proved we stand before the country bound to see that some remedy is provided.

The resolution incorporated in the first amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, which has been voted down, comes directly and perfectly within the range of the main resolution of the Senator from Indiana, which I intend to support, because the Senate must not lose sight of this question. What is the necessity of the inquiry at all? If there is a defect in the laws of the country, it should be corrected by Congress in case it has the jurisdiction; and I say as a Senator from the State of Arkansas that if the contingency put forth in the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota is established, I want Congress to go to the uttermost bounds in prescribing some remedy for it, and I would even strain a little to do so. If this inquiry is going to be made at all, let it be made as broad as the land if possible, as broad as the subject can be extended, so that Congress may have the entire subject before it; fix the blame, if blame there be at all, upon the proper persons, and if the power exists to punish, let them be punished.

I do not speak of anything of this character in the State of Arkansas, for from the leading colored gentlemen of that State I have letters informing me that but few have ever left the State, and those few have returned to take up their abode again, consistent with the custom that no man ever left that State yet, white or black, who did not go back there to live again, except one poor individual who died manfully making his way back, but he died before he could reach the confines of the State. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, if we are to make the inquiry, let us make it; and if not, let us vote down the entire proposition and not trouble Congress with it any longer.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I simply rise to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the incorrect statement which he has made in regard to the legislation on the subject of the freedmen. By treaties between the Government of the United States and the Indians occupying the Indian Territory, it was distinctly and emphatically provided that a portion of the land inside the Indian Territory should be set apart for the occupation of the freedmen of the South. That was done by the Government at the time the treaties were made, in view of the exodus to which the Senator from Georgia has referred.

At the last session of Congress I had the honor of offering a resolution inquiring of the Department of the Interior what land had been occupied in the Indian Territory by the Indians and by the freedmen of the South. A document is on file now in the Senate, in response to that resolution, showing that no freedmen have ever been taken by the Government from the Southern States and carried to the Indian Territory. That land awaits them to-day, a land peculiarly blessed by Heaven, a land peculiarly adapted to the African race, and I leave it to the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber to explain why that land has been neglected and why the negroes have been carried to the States of the North; why Indiana, with its climate not adapted to the African race, not adapted to their peculiar idiosyncrasies, is to be selected, when the bounty and largess of the Government has provided a place elsewhere specially adapted to these people?

A word further. I propose to vote for the resolution of the Senator from Indiana and I do it upon one ground alone, because I know full well if the democratic party votes down that resolution the partisan press of the North in the interest of the republican party will immediately charge that it is voted down to suppress investigation. I believe, in fact, sir, I know, that the statements made in regard to mistreatment and cruelty exercised by the people of the South toward the negroes to be unfounded, false, and even malicious; but in order that the fullest and freest investigation may be had and the true character of this exodus may be made known to the intelligent and impartial public of the United States, I vote for this resolution, and for that reason alone.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Indiana to accept the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. WINDOM. I am very much obliged for the information given by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] and it only proves the expediency of the adoption of the amendment proposed by myself a few moments ago. If there is such a territory as that which can be provided for these people, then the dangers which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] seems to dread so much can be very easily averted. I think that a committee could accomplish very great good by inquiring into and reporting the condition of that territory and directing these people to it, if they must go, as my amendment was made solely upon that condition—that they are compelled to go. If they must go, then let us turn their attention to that territory open for them. But why did the Senator from Missouri vote against permitting the committee to inquire into that and make a report upon it, so that it might be known to them?

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I will not undertake to answer for the Senator from Missouri, who can answer so well for himself; but I will tell the Senator from Minnesota one reason for the vote that I gave against his amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Indiana. It was, as I conceived, the improper presumption in the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota that the colored people of the South had been treated cruelly and unjustly by the white people of the South.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question just there? Is not that presumption in the resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana? He bases his inquiries upon that assumption, that statement. I simply say that in the event that statement upon which the presumption to act is based is proved, the committee shall inquire as to a remedy.

Mr. VOORHEES. On the contrary——

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to answer that question?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. RANSOM. If that presumption is in the resolution of the Senator from Indiana, why did the Senator from Minnesota assert it in his amendment?

Mr. WINDOM. I simply quoted the language of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. RANSOM. On the contrary, Mr. President, and with great deference to the Senator from Minnesota, he will allow me to say so, this is an afterthought of his. The Senator from Indiana expressly declared and was most particular to declare that, while he did not specially except to the other matter of the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, his main objection to that amendment was because it assumed as a fact what he did not believe to be true, and what he did not think could be proved. The Senator from Minnesota keeps his seat, he hears that objection assigned by the Senator from Indiana to his amendment, and he does not undertake to avoid that objection until I state that that is my reason for voting against his amendment. With very great deference, I submit to the Senator from Minnesota that he had not perhaps given that part of his amendment the attention that he has since paid to it.

Mr. President, I may feel perhaps too much upon this question. The State of North Carolina happens to be mentioned, I know with no intention of unkindness, in this resolution by the Senator from Indiana. He has always shown too much good heart, he will allow me to say, toward my people for me to have a dream that he could have for us any but the most generous sentiments, but it is right that I should feel sensitive on this question. It seems that this recent movement from North Carolina has given rise to this resolution, and the Senator from Minnesota takes us to task because we will not vote for a presumption that this charge is true, vote for a presumption which charges that eight millions of people are unjust to four millions of people who live with them. Is that intimation to be taken and embraced by us without a word of protest, when we know the contrary to be the fact? Why, sir, it is a very easy matter to say that eight or ten millions of our people are unjust to their fellow citizens; but should we allow that assumption to pass by unnoticed, uncontradicted, unrebuked, and actually vote that if it should happen to be true, then certain extraordinary legislation is to be adopted? Let the Senator from Minnesota put the cup which he presents to us to his own lips, and ask himself if he would drink of it in the case of Minnesota?

Mr. WINDOM. Does not the Senator propose to vote for the resolution of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. RANSOM. I do.

Mr. WINDOM. Do you not base it upon the allegation which somebody makes that there is cruel and unjust treatment there which causes this exodus?

Mr. RANSOM. I do. I base it upon further ground also——

Mr. WINDOM. One question further. Then, basing your inquiry upon that ground, in case that allegation is proved true are you not willing to go further and remedy the evil?

Mr. RANSOM. I know, sir, that that allegation will not be proved true, I know it will be shown to be utterly false, and I will not vote a stigma upon my people or the Senator's people upon an assertion that I know is false. That is my answer to the Senator from Minnesota, and that ought to be his answer and would be his answer if Minnesota was thus assailed.

Mr. President, what are the facts in reference to North Carolina, for that is the point I wish to meet? It has been currently stated in the press of the country that these people were fleeing, in the language of the Senator from Minnesota, from injustice. What I may say upon that question the Senator from Minnesota or his friends, the good people elsewhere, might suppose to be influenced by party prejudice, by local association, or by some other prejudice; but I propose now to read to the Senator from Minnesota and to the country testimony in reference to North Carolina which I think he will not dispute.

It is well known, Mr. President, that North Carolina is divided in politics, and I beg leave to inform the Senator that the first district of North Carolina is represented in the other end of this Capitol by a republican, Mr. MARTIN, elected last year, or said to be elected, by the republicans of that district; he now holds his seat in the House of Representatives; he is a fair, a truthful, and, I think, although we differ in politics, a patriotic man. Mr. MARTIN has published his statement in reference to this movement of the colored people. The Senator from Minnesota has seen that statement. It was published in the newspapers of this city ten days ago, and has not been contradicted. Mr. MARTIN denounces these charges as false. At the time Mr. MARTIN made his statement there was in this city a former member of Congress, a distinguished man in North Carolina, whom a great many of our people respect for his social virtues and personal qualities; I mean Hon. William A. Smith, who represented the Raleigh district as a republican in the House of Representatives for several years since the war. He is a republican, was on the republican ticket year before last with Judge Settle of North Carolina for governor, he being the candidate for lieutenant-governor, against my colleague and the present governor of North Carolina, Governor Jarvis. He was second on the republican ticket in that widely-known canvass; he received an almost unanimous colored vote in our State. He is a great popular favorite with the colored people. He has stated in the public prints of this city, and the attention of the Senator from Minnesota has been called to the fact, that there was no truth in these charges against the people of North Carolina, that there was, in Mr. Smith's language, absolute, perfect political and personal liberty there with both races, and that no injustice or wrongs were committed on the colored people, but that they enjoyed every right of Americans without impairment or molestation.

But the testimony does not here stop, sir. There is a distinguished man in North Carolina, well known to the country, well known to Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who now occupies a high Federal position in North Carolina, a short time the republican governor of that State, and a man of high, perhaps the highest authority in North Carolina with the republican party. What does Ex-Governor Holden, of North Carolina, say? He is now by appointment of the President of the United States, and has been for the last eight years, postmaster at the capital of our State, Raleigh. Here is what he says:

> Ex-Governor Holden, postmaster, had heard very little of the exodus, but knew of no oppression of the colored race more so than poor whites. In nine out of ten cases where the negro conducts himself decently and properly he receives justice from the courts and magistrates just as promptly as the white man in this or any other State. He had heard of no cases for a year or two of oppression.
> "Are they improved?"
>
> "I think they are improved in all respects, both mentally and physically, and their progress has been wonderfully rapid and continuous. So far as I am informed, no good reason for the exodus has occurred."
>
> "What is the attitude of the whites?"
>
> "The white race of all factions desire to retain them for a number of reasons."
>
> "Have they equal advantages?"
> "Yes; they have schools, &c., the same as whites. Outside of natural race prejudice the condition of the blacks compares favorably with the poor whites. I see no reason for any class to be dissatisfied now. Cotton is going up, labor rates are increasing, and the prospects for a new and better era for all are bright."

There is another distinguished republican in North Carolina, appointed United States district attorney by two Presidents of the republican party, approved and confirmed by a republican Senate as republican United States district attorney for North Carolina three or four distinct times. I think he is a personal acquaintance of my friend from Minnesota. I allude to Hon. R. C. Badger, the son of the late George E. Badger, who occupied and honored a seat in this body for so many years.

> Hon. R. C. Badger, well known in the North as a "stalwart" republican, gladly assented to an interview. Said he, "The negro is as well treated here as any place in the world. The race prejudice is being rapidly overcome, and the race, as a race, is improving. This was instanced at the recent colored industrial fair held here. Governor Jarvis, a bitter democrat, Colonel Polk, superintendent of agriculture, Major Manley, all democrats, and I made speeches. All were of the opinion that there were decided signs of advancement."

"Why should they leave, then?"

"I know of no reason they should leave this country. I am satisfied that they will all soon be destitute in the North, which is different from this section. Here they never work on Saturdays, and two or three days per week will support anybody. The only result I can see of the exodus is that they are going to suffer by it."

"Was their exhibition creditable?"

"It was very creditable. Their exhibition of hogs, chickens, &c., exceeded that of our State fair. Their needle-work, penmanship, and painting, which are now being taught, showed very great aptitude. It would have been creditable to the whites, who have been enjoying civilization a long time, and was exceedingly creditable to a race enjoying, comparatively, civilization for only fifteen years."

"How about mental progress?"

"Their school systems are constantly improving under the patronage of the State. The only effect"—

I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to this—

"The only effect of the exodus will be their ruin."

Now, Mr. President, if it will not weary the Senate, I beg leave to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota especially to the statement of a colored man in North Carolina of high standing with his race. He deserves great credit for the position which he has attained. He is the editor of a paper in North Carolina conducted by colored people alone. Hear what he says:

O. Hunter, jr., an intelligent colored man, a former slave, and editor of the Industrial Journal, spoke freely and said: "So far as my knowledge goes, I believe the colored people are better off in North Carolina than in any other Southern State. I have been all over the North, and find none better treated. They are treated in those counties affected by the exodus probably better than elsewhere, and I have found them there well contented and happy. Wages have been low and times hard, but that is the case everywhere. In the courts"—

I call the attention of the Senator to this intelligent statement of a candid and influential colored man because it has been charged that in the courts his race did not have justice—

"In the courts we have our own color on the juries and have the same rights and privileges as white men."

"How are they mentally?"

"The mental improvement of my race has been commendable. They have made rapid progress since the emancipation, and feel that they must be well educated to compete with the white race. This is an ambition with the colored people where it is not with the poorer whites. I have noticed that where complaint exists it has been superinduced by bad management and lack of economy, or else chargeable to bad crops and poor markets."

Mr. President, for the last two or three or four weeks this subject has been before the country. These statements of distinguished republicans of both colors have been published to the world; and so far, from all the limits of North Carolina, there has not been made one statement, one breath, that varies the general tenor or truth of this testimony. Why, sir, what are the facts in this case? All the country knows that North Carolina is a democratic State; that it is governed and administered by the democratic party. There is not a township in the State in which colored people live that has not a school-house for their special education; there is not a court-house in the State in which they are not heard, and their every right taken care of. We have already built for them an asylum for the deaf, the dumb, and the blind; we are now building for them at this identical place from which they are going, Goldsborough, an asylum for the insane. They have their military companies in the State; one of them bears the name of my colleague, known as the Vance Guards, all colored. I am in the habit constantly, when at home, of addressing juries composed largely of colored men. I vote at a precinct in which there are 36 white voters and 494 colored voters; I think I state the figures correctly. The question has been, not whether they were allowed to vote, but whether I should.

Mr. President, as a Senator from North Carolina, knowing these facts, seeing them not admitted but gladly proved by the white republicans and the colored republicans of North Carolina, could I keep my seat and vote for an imputation that these charges against that people were true? I have so often said that if I could be a sectional man I would not stay here that I will not repeat it; but if the northern people could understand the sentiment of the southern people upon this question there would be and could be no difficulty between us. Why should we hate these colored people? Have we cause to hate them? It is true they differ with us politically to a very great extent, but we do not blame them for that difference. We hope to correct it, but we do not blame them for their error. Every reason, every consideration, every duty, every interest should and does make us friends.

After two hundred years of what was known as African slavery we surrendered back to you four millions of colored people whom we had received ignorant, benighted victims of superstition and barbarism, from a land across the sea, the most intelligent, improved and Christian community of colored people on the earth. At the end of two hundred years of this bondage that is held up to universal execration, we returned them to you, and you declared by your most solemn judgment that they were fit to be free American citizens and capable of exercising every right of citizenship—even the sacred right and duty of the ballot. And now after that war of ruin and all this revolution, at the end of fourteen years from the surrender of the armies, we show you this people and prove by their own testimony and all concurrent history in every art and in every duty that makes good society they are making advancement. Ought not the picture to satisfy you? I have no reproaches to make against my fellow-countrymen of the North—and when I use that term I mean it—but I ask you Senators not to travel always south, but go a little farther on the Northern and on the Union Pacific Railroad and look at the population that you have had in your charge. I invoke history here to-day as my witness, and invoke the world to compare the Indians whom you have particularly managed and the negroes whom we have controlled, and to declare which is the best picture. You behold on the one side, four, five, six millions of negroes peaceful, and they ought to be happy, improving in all the arts of life, American citizens, and you contemplate on the other side the race whose destiny has been chiefly in your hands, gradually disappearing from the face of the earth, "with their hands raised against all men and the hands of all men raised against them."

If the Senate desires proof before their eyes of the disposition and opinion of the southern people on this question, what stronger evidence could be offered than the distinguished Senator from Georgia has in this debate manifested? When interrogated by the Senator from New York as to his opinion of the capacity of the colored men for government—you heard the words of the Senator—did he go back to old idols? Did he return to the false gods? No; but he declared with a candor worthy of him, in his place in the Senate, his advanced opinion on that question, "that he believed there were in this colored people the elements of great improvement;" and he would not permit any charge of inconsistency to make him deny that great truth. The Senator from New York is not now in his seat; but can it be supposed that the southern people deny capacities of intelligence and improvement to the colored race, when we taxed ourselves to provide for them schools and institutions of learning to that extent that a late impartial newspaper article truly declared that their school-houses dotted the hills in North Carolina.

I ask pardon of the Senate for having taken up so much of its time. It was, I believe, unnecessary. I do not believe that anything said in the newspapers, I do not believe that anything said even upon this floor at this time, I do not believe that anything that may be written in the books at this hour would impair the character which North Carolina and her people have for truth, for lawfulness, for justice to all men, and for invincible and supreme love of liberty. I hope that for two hundred years that character has been too well established to be broken down by any accident, by any misstatement, by any prejudice. But as her son and one of her Senators on this floor, I was unwilling that an intimation should go out that seemed, for a second even, to cast a cloud upon her good and great name.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this discussion has been a very interesting one to me, and I think it will be a very interesting one to the people of the country. The Senator from North Carolina has avowed his intention to vote for the resolve offered by the Senator from Indiana. That resolve affirmed as a fact that "large numbers of negroes from the Southern States, and especially from the State of North Carolina, are emigrating to the Northern States, especially to the State of Indiana." I suppose, therefore, we have the testimony of a Senator who says he knows the fact so well, and who does undoubtedly know the fact which he asserts so well, that large numbers of the people of his State are in process of emigration, as asserted. They are leaving a warm climate to which they are adapted; they are leaving the homes where they and their ancestors have been so well treated for two hundred years, seeking a cold climate and a strange place. They are men so situated that three days in the week of labor—if I correctly understood the Senator—are enough to furnish them all the necessaries and comforts of life.

Mr. RANSOM rose.

Mr. HOAR. Did I misunderstand the Senator?

Mr. RANSOM. I did not state that. I will state it, however; but it was stated by Mr. R. C. Badger, of Raleigh, North Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. That is true; it was stated in a statement which the Senator read, but which I understood him to indorse. These are intelligent American citizens. Whatever opinion to the contrary has existed in the past under some policy, under the operation of measures that somebody set in motion, the opinion of anybody who denied that at the South has changed; and now it is agreed that these laborers, so well off, so contented at home, with school-houses awaiting their children, enjoying all the civil rights of citizens, able to live in comfort by three days' work in a week, and fully and thoroughly understanding their own interest, are leaving North Carolina in large numbers——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; when I have put the question which I was about to put. Now, will the Senator from North Carolina, who understands the question so well, go a little further and inform the Senate what it is that occasions this great emigration of intelligent men who understand their interest so well?

Mr. BAILEY. In order that the Senator may get an answer to the whole question, will he allow me to suggest at this time, Mr. President, that there are colonies of emigrants from the State of Massachusetts moving out to or about to move out to the State of Tennessee? They are migrating for the purpose of farming in some portions of my State, colonies of persons who have been born and reared and educated in the State of Massachusetts, where they have school-houses, where they have laws by which they are protected, and from which they receive all the protection that can be given by civilization to men as a security for the fruits of their labor. They are coming out, however, to-day to Tennessee in great numbers, in numbers much greater than the number of these emigrants from the State of North Carolina. Will the Senator from Massachusetts tell me how and why men shall leave the State of Massachusetts, where they have school-houses and churches and civilization and laws for their protection in all their personal and political rights, leave the homes of their fathers, leave the associates of their childhood, leave the men with whom they have mixed and mingled in the affairs of life, and go out away down into that despised South, into the State of Tennessee? In the one case it is alleged that political and other causes have been operative; in the other nothing of the kind is said. The Senator from Massachusetts would be surprised to hear that these men were driven from home on account of the abridgment or denial of personal or political rights. That statement has been made in regard to negro emigration from the State of North Carolina. We wish to show by this resolution that it is as equally without foundation as a charge would be that these men of Massachusetts are leaving their homes, leaving their firesides, to seek among a strange people and in a strange land new homes, and in a hot climate.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has anticipated what I was about to say in regard to that point. Ever since the opening of our western Territories to settlement emigration of this kind has been on its way. The State which the emigration seeks has sought to encourage and create the spirit which has moved the emigrant westward. About our railroad stations, in our newspapers, in our village libraries to-day, the States of the West and of the South, or the land-agents who desire to have those States populated, are circulating the advertisements and the inducements to this emigration. The State of Ohio was colonized by people from my own county. But, for the first time in the history of the country, a Senator representing the State which emigration so seeks gets up and asserts or intimates that, in his judgment, it will be discovered that all these emigrants are making a great mistake, and that if they expect to find what has been held out to them they will be disappointed. Now, I would like to have the Senator from North Carolina, in answer to my question, inform me what it is that induces these emigrants from North Carolina to seek such a disappointment as the Senator from Indiana says awaits them in that State.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I sympathize with the great desire of the Senator from Massachusetts, and it always gives me pleasure to answer him.

If I have said anything that has led the Senator from Massachusetts to believe that I had been guilty of the very gross absurdity of intimating that the colored people of the South had reached that point of civilization and intelligence at which they cannot be imposed upon or misled, I have been very unhappy. I will endeavor to give the Senator my impression of this movement.

With very great deference to the Senator from Minnesota, let me say that the first breath I ever heard of it came from him in a casual debate in the Senate over a year ago, when he suggested that the blacks should go to some Territory, of which he and the Senator from Kansas were speaking, then occupied by the Indians, and afterward in that elaborate argument which he presented to the Senate upon the same question. Since then it has been agitating the minds of the colored people throughout the South; there is no doubt about it. It naturally made a great impression upon them. The colored people regard the Senators from the North, the republican party of the North, they have looked to them and they still look to them as their leaders.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me? Do I understand him to say that these colored people whom he has described were persuaded by the Senator from Minnesota and other northern Senators that they were not well off in North Carolina?

Mr. RANSOM. I could answer that question very promptly. If they were not persuaded it was only because they did not believe what northern Senators told them, for if the Senator from Massachusetts had done his distinguished peer by his side [Mr. WINDOM] the honor to listen to his speech made in this Chamber in the last Congress he would have known that that Senator so declared in that speech. He held up a picture of southern outrage toward the black people in that speech which has never been surpassed even in this body for its horrid colors.

Mr. DAWES, (in his seat.) And deceived the blacks themselves?

Mr. RANSOM. I do not know about that; I am afraid it did. It was well calculated to deceive a confiding, simple, and good people.

Mr. DAWES. They do not know when they are well treated?

Mr. RANSOM. I do not know about that, sir; I think they do; but I think an ignorant man can always be misled. I repeat, an ignorant man can always be misled; and I will not do myself the injustice to say in this presence by artful, by false, by insidious statements. It may be a jest for the senior Senator from Massachusetts to speak lightly on this question; I do not know that it affects him; but I have seen him on this floor when the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts was assailed manifest very intense feeling, and I think he would have received, at least he ought to have received, with very little tolerance a suggestion of levity when a question affecting the honor of his State was before the Senate.

Yes, Mr. President, unfortunately the colored people of the South are easily deceived. Unfortunately they have been horridly deceived, and I am very afraid they will still continue to be deceived. If they were not deceived I ask the Senator from Massachusetts now, (and I speak to the senior Senator, I speak to the volunteer in this debate,) sitting here as a Senator from the great State of Massachusetts, occupying a chair that has been filled by Webster, by Sumner, and other great Massachusetts Senators, if in the face of the statements that I have read here from leading republicans of North Carolina, undisputed statements, statements from the intelligent colored men, my statement, if you will, and all contemporaneous history upon this question, he is prepared to say upon what is called current rumor that these people are treated badly in North Carolina? I ask him if he proposes to take the statement of Governor Holden, of Mr. Badger, of Mr. MARTIN at the other end of the Capitol, of Hon. William A. Smith, of Colonel Humphries, of every leading republican of North Carolina who has opened his lips upon the subject, or still to believe a calumny against that people without an indorser? That is the question, sir. I ask him if he is prepared to-day to dispute our friendship for those people when we give them education, when they say themselves that they sit upon our juries, when we give them asylums for their unfortunate, the deaf, the dumb, the blind, and the insane? I ask him in the face of the statements of their first men if he will rise upon the floor of the Senate without authority, without any responsible testimony, and say that he believes the colored people of North Carolina are treated badly?

The Senator from Massachusetts who sits nearest me [Mr. HOAR] asked, is it not strange that these people should leave the balmy climate of the South; is it not strange they should leave the graves of their ancestors, their beautiful little school-houses, and in the dead of winter go off to the cold North, the cheerless North, to find an unwelcome home in Indiana? That is the argument. It has already been met. That argument, as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] said, would unjustly blacken with infamy every one of the great New England States, for you know they have settled up the great Northwest. It would have blackened long since the character of North Carolina and Virginia, who sent their sons all over the continent.

Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this is the first time in the history of a people that he has known them to act unwisely? I ask him how many popular movements history records which were unjustifiable and disastrous? How many grand movements were mad, were insane, that no historian has been found wild enough to approve? If there is any truth in the old story read in Homer and Virgil the Trojan war was the wildest error. What will the Senator say of the Crusades? Ah! what will he say of the late civil war in this country?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator will suspend, the Chair will announce his signature to an enrolled bill and joint resolutions.

[The announcement was made, as appears on page 155.]

Mr. HOAR. The sensitive Senator from North Carolina, naturally and properly sensitive upon this question——

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator has broken into my remarks. I had not finished what I commenced to say.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. No; the Chair called me to my seat in order to announce enrolled bills signed.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I rose merely to call his attention to the fact that he was in the course of his remarks misunderstanding my position.

Mr. RANSOM. Very well, sir.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will permit me I will say what I have to say now.

Mr. RANSOM. I wanted to finish what I was saying, sir.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator represents me as having addressed an argument to the Senate. I have done no such thing. I have addressed an inquiry for information to the Senator himself, the Senator having avowed his purpose to vote for a resolution which affirmed as a fact that large numbers of the natives of his State were—I will not use the term "fleeing," because it is not used in the resolution—emigrating from his State, and which affirmed as a fact that the currently alleged explanation of that emigration was that they were treated unjustly and cruelly by their white fellow-citizens. In those two facts—first, the existence of the emigration in large numbers; secondly, the currency of the allegation that it is from this cause that they are emigrating—the Senator avows his concurrence. He admits those things to be true, and he rose to give the Senate some information in explanation of those two facts. He stated the condition of the colored people in North Carolina to be, I do not know that he used the word "contented," but to be such as would make anybody contented—prosperous, enjoying all their rights, schools for their children, asylums for their deaf and dumb and insane, and able to earn in three days of the week all the necessaries and comforts of life.

That, the Senator says, is their condition; and I rose simply to ask him, as he was informing the Senate on the general subject, if he would not inform the Senate what was the cause of this emigration; to which he replied that it was caused by the misrepresentation of some dishonest and designing persons to these people. I asked him whether that misrepresentation was a misrepresentation as to the excellence of their condition at home, and I am not quite sure that I understood his answer. If I did, he said it was. I should like to say also to the Senator that it is true that great emigrations have taken place in all history and in our own history, but they never have taken place to my knowledge without some cause adequate to move and stir and excite large masses of men. Now, what is the cause adequate to move and excite and stir this large mass of intelligent American citizens, in the Senator's judgment?

Mr. RANSOM. Now, Mr. President, I hope without further interruption either from the Senator himself or from his colleague, I trust I may be allowed to answer that question.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me right here——

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, I will allow the Senator right here. I could not allow him anywhere else.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator has taken as a grievance a remark which I made in my seat.

Mr. RANSOM. Oh, no.

Mr. DAWES. I beg him to understand that I am the furthest possible from any intent to stir up his sensibilities, or to be provoked into an attack upon his State.

Mr. RANSOM. Ah!

Mr. DAWES. I have no intention of making any attack upon his State; but the Senator himself appealed to me a moment ago to say something about his State, and when I try to get the floor then he says he hopes I will wait.

Mr. RANSOM. Oh no, sir.

Mr. DAWES. If my dear friend from North Carolina will only be patient, the explanation of the remark I made in my seat I will try to make to the Senate, if he will indicate at what time it will please him best.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I find it very hard to please the Senators from Massachusetts. One scarcely asks me a question before the other springs up with another. I will answer both of them.

Mr. DAWES. I do not ask any question.

Mr. RANSOM. Very well; the Senator put one a while ago. Let the Senator wait. The junior Senator from Massachusetts asked me the cause of this movement among the southern colored people. I was answering him, and I will continue that answer. I might ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts. That is a custom that we have not quite learned in the genial climate in which I live; but I will do it. I would like to know why the exodus has left Kansas and is now directed to Indiana? That is the inquiry which I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts. Last year the movement was across the Mississippi, but now it is from North Carolina to Indiana. Will the Senator from Massachusetts tell me what is carrying these black people to Indiana?

Why do they go through Ohio? What carries them to Indiana? Why do none of them go to republican States? Are the New England people now stopping in Indiana? Oh, no; they are going out to the farthest limit of the great West—to Dakota, to Colorado, all over this continent; but the colored man is suddenly diverted from Kansas and goes to Indiana to stop there. We all know that there is to be an election in this country next year, a presidential election, and that Indiana is a pivotal State, and that the democrats hold that State now by ten or fifteen thousand majority.

I have shown, Mr. President, that no cause exists for this emigration in the condition of these people in North Carolina. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts why are they leaving their old homes, why are they leaving their people, why are they leaving a land in which they have justice and plenty and going to Indiana? Tell me why Indiana is the selected State for their immigration.

Mr. WINDOM. I think I can answer the Senator upon the principle stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] perhaps. He said they are so fond of democratic rule, and that is about the only democratic State left in the North, and hence I suppose they seek it; they are fond of democratic rule.

Mr. RANSOM. Ah, Mr. President, that is trifling with a great question.

Mr. McDONALD. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that they are more fond of democratic charity than they are of republican charity.

Mr. RANSOM. Some things are so striking that they have to be noticed a little more perhaps than they ought to be; but how will my friend from Minnesota appear in history when he gets up and says that these people are fleeing from democratic oppression in North Carolina to seek democratic love in Indiana?

Mr. WINDOM. I explained it upon the philosophy and logic of the honorable Senator from Georgia, not mine, assuming that the Senator from North Carolina would think more of his statement than of mine.

Mr. RANSOM. If the Senator from Minnesota would only follow the logic of the Senator from Georgia, I should be very happy; but he does assign it as a reason, when I am putting a grave question to the Senator from Massachusetts, and now will it go out to the people of the United States that when the interrogatory is put why these people go to Indiana, the Senator from Minnesota, if I may be pardoned for saying so, the great Moses of the exodus, says they are going there to be oppressed by the democrats.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not say so.

Mr. RANSOM. Well, the Senator inferred it, did he not? What other reason has he, has any Senator, assigned for the selection of Indiana and the abandonment of Kansas?

Mr. President, let us look at the question a little further. I did not intend to go into these details before the Senate. My purpose was to leave that to the press, to leave that to be discussed upon the stump. But from where do you find this exodus? From North Carolina, where the universal concurrent unexceptional testimony is that they are as well treated as they are anywhere upon the face of the earth, the colored editor says as well as they are anywhere on the globe. Then there is no cause for their leaving North Carolina. But they are going to Indiana, where they are wanted and only wanted for one purpose. They are not wanted there, my friend from Indiana says, to work the fields; for they have excellent and abundant labor. They are not wanted there to build railroads, for they have them already built. They can be wanted there but for one purpose—to carry Indiana for the republican candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

Mr. WINDOM. Why not by general law provide a Territory for them, as I suggested a year ago in a resolution which the Senator and his associates voted down?

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Minnesota again shifts the issue. I ask him why they have been carried to Indiana, and he wheels around and asks me why will you not then carry them to the Territories? I would let them go where they please, stay in North Carolina if they will, go to Indiana if they will, go to the Territories if they think proper. I leave it to them. I trust, if the Senator from Minnesota will allow me, that I never will live long enough to think of a constitutional proposition expressed and embodied in the resolution of that distinguished Senator to provide for the peace of this country, to provide for everlasting sectional amity, by distributing population equally through the different congressional districts of the Union.

Mr. WINDOM. It distributes itself. It was partial distribution that was referred to in the resolution I offered.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator proposed to raise a committee to report to the Senate if the right way to settle the great sectional issue was not the partial distribution of population among the congressional districts in which there was an excess or deficiency of population.

Mr. President, let us look a little further at this matter. Whence does this exodus come? I want to satisfy the Senator from Massachusetts. You cross the Potomac; you have passed through Maryland. There are a great many black people in Maryland. You cross through Virginia. There are a great many black people in Virginia. You strike North Carolina, and you go nearly one hundred miles. You go ninety miles through the State before you take up your people for Indiana. In other words, Senators, you go to the most densely populated place, where there is the largest supply of colored voters, and there you commence your colonization. You come down through Maryland, through Virginia; you pass on from Petersburgh to Weldon; you go ninety-two miles in the State of North Carolina before you commence your canvass for these people. You take from that thickly settled section of black people, the first dense settlement of black people which you reach, and there you take your emigrants and carry them to Indiana.

Mr. VANCE. From the second congressional district.

Mr. RANSOM. You take them from the second congressional district of North Carolina, as my colleague says, with nine thousand republican majority in it. You have asked me the question, and I ask you why they are leaving North Carolina? Their own people say it is wrong. Every leading white republican in North Carolina says that it is wrong. The republican member of Congress at the other end of the Capitol, I repeat, says it is wrong. The late republican member says it is wrong. Your district attorney says it is wrong. Your late governor says it is wrong; and without exception, from the intelligent white and black people of North Carolina, you hear it said there is no cause for it. I ask you for the cause, and then I ask you why they go to Indiana and not to some other State?

Mr. President, I ask pardon of the Senate for having detained it so long.

Mr. McPHERSON. The pending resolution evidently will provoke a great deal of discussion. I only rise to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have some very important business in executive session, and I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope that——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to go into executive session is not a debatable one. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. McPHERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	McPherson,
Baldwin,	Coke,	Jonas,	Maxey,

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina was so anxious when he set out that I should say something and so desirous of having somebody from Massachusetts attack his State, that having failed to induce my colleague to assault his State, he turned around with a direct invitation to me and pressed it so hard that I was led into an involuntary comment upon his speech, which seemed to me to be the essence of the whole matter. It seemed, I should judge from his appearance, that the Senator manifested some feeling. I did not intend to say a word and do not now mean to do so beyond this: The Senator concluded his speech by abandoning his solicitude about his own State and turning his attention entirely to the State of Indiana, towards which the emigrants from his State are going, and expressed intense anxiety for the welfare of Indiana and a desire that something might be done to prevent this lasting injury to that State by emigrants from his own State going there. If these emigrants are of the character that the Senator says they are, and I do not doubt it, I should think the Senator would be less solicitous about the effect upon Indiana than he seems to be. I have nothing to do with Indiana especially. If they are such industrious citizens, intelligent, capable of working out such results as the Senator from North Carolina says they are, so that they can acquire a competence and compete with the white people in his State at public fairs by only three days' labor in a week, I should think he would congratulate the State of Indiana upon such an acquisition to its thrifty and economical and industrious accumulating population. I should suppose so; but the Senator does not seem to take that view of it. He says there is some black design upon the future welfare of the State of Indiana by the emigration of the best citizens of North Carolina into that State, and then he turns around and wants to know if I would not defend my State if it was assaulted? I would, if it was assaulted in that way; I certainly would.

It is true, as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] has said, that a great many of the good people of Massachusetts—the best blood of Massachusetts is going every day into not only Tennessee, but every State in this Union, and it has been so for fifty years.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether the emigrants from his State go out from there and go into the free State of Tennessee, where there is freedom of opinion, where there is freedom of action, where there is freedom of election, where there is universal suffrage, in order to escape from the laws of the State of Massachusetts and from a discrimination made between citizens there?

Mr. DAWES. Is not the Senator willing that I should make my speech? I told him that the people of Massachusetts are going into Tennessee; that they are carrying their energy, their enterprise, their industry, their frugality, their capital into that State and availing themselves of the natural wealth and water-power and facilities for development and growth in that State which my State does not afford; and so they are going into every State in this Union.

Mr. BAILEY rose.

Mr. DAWES. Let me have the floor. There is not a State in this Union into which the capital and blood and energy of New England have not forced themselves to develop the latent energies and wealth of those States, and has the State of Massachusetts complained of that? Has the State of Massachusetts set up an outcry against it? The law which governs emigration is a law above all attempts here by committees of investigation, clothed or hampered as they may be by instructions to interfere. People go to Tennessee, they go to North Carolina, they go to Michigan, they go to Minnesota, they go to Illinois and to Iowa from Massachusetts, because they believe they are going to better their condition by going.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to say that we welcome the citizens of his State to Tennessee?

Mr. DAWES. I know it.

Mr. BAILEY. And moreover to suggest here that we never believe in Tennessee that they are compelled to flee from political or other persecution in Massachusetts?

Mr. DAWES. I have not intimated that they did.

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all; but it has been intimated on the floor of the Senate that these citizens of North Carolina who leave their homes and seek new homes elsewhere are driven out by a denial or an abridgment of their political rights.

Mr. DAWES. Who intimates it?

Mr. WINDOM. That is the question.

Mr. DAWES. Who intimates it? The Senator from North Carolina says that the Senator from Minnesota is to blame for all this.

Mr. RANSOM. Oh, no!

Mr. DAWES. He says the good citizens of North Carolina were in peace and happiness and frugality beyond all measure; there they were in Georgia surpassing all calculation and comprehension in the improvement of their condition and their intelligence, becoming educated by the thousands; there they were in Tennessee and all these States in the belief, and in the intelligent belief, that they were in the best possible condition until the Senator from Minnesota here in his seat deluded and deceived them, and led them to the strange conclusion that they were maltreated down there. Whether they are maltreated, whether they enjoy political rights, or personal rights, or whether they have opportunity to better their condition or not, they will judge for themselves; and the more the Senators from those States assure the people of the United States of their ability to better their condition there, of their opportunity to educate themselves and their children; and the more they tell the people of the United States that they avail themselves of these conditions, the more the people of the United States will inquire what it is, then, that induces them to leave their homes, to leave their opportunities——

Mr. RANSOM. And go to Indiana?

Mr. DAWES. To leave their climate, so congenial to them, and to face all the hardships and all the disadvantages of cold northern climates, and seek a new home and new associations and new opportunities for the sake of new advantages. The more we are told by these Senators of the better condition of these people at home, the more intense will be the conviction on the part of the people of the United States that there is some power——

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President——

Mr. DAWES. There is some cause——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly I do.

Mr. RANSOM. Only for one second. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I hope while he is on his feet and taking so much pains to explain what he said, that he will feel called upon to answer the question that I put to him, whether he himself would state here that he did not believe the statements made by the republican witnesses whom I have read, and would rather take up this idle rumor of prejudice to the effect that the negroes are treated with injustice in North Carolina. I put that question again to the Senator from Massachusetts, and I will try to hold him to it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator wants to know why I do not take the statements of other people rather than his own. It was his own statement here upon this floor that led me to make a remark which hurt the Senator so seriously. It was his statement here, substantiated by the statements that he brought in of others, political friends of these colored people and of myself, that they were enjoying these privileges, supplemented by his remark that somebody had so deceived them that they were not conscious of their own condition and welfare.

Mr. RANSOM. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, then I will ask him if the statement that I have read here from his political friends of both colors in North Carolina, substantiated, if he will have it so, by one of the Senators, and no doubt by both of them, from that State, is to be discarded by him, and he still insist upon his theory without bringing a witness or any testimony before the country.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, for the purposes of this argument I am willing to admit the statement that there is in the mind of the colored man when he leaves North Carolina no idea of a political character in his emigration from that State.

Mr. RANSOM. That was not the question.

Mr. DAWES. I take the testimony of the Senator from North Carolina as brought in here, the statement of the Republican member in the House, and the other gentlemen that he named, and the statement of himself and his colleague, if his colleague makes the statement, that these colored men enjoy all their political rights in North Carolina, and I still ask him what it is that moves men in bodies and in masses who enjoy all their political rights there, enjoy all the opportunities to better their physical and mental condition in the home of their fathers and in the home of their own blood and children, to seek a home in the inclement climate of Northern States? What is it, sir? I come back to the point that the more the Senator impresses it upon the public that they do enjoy all these opportunities, the more the public will demand an answer to the question "Why do these people move?" They are intelligent, my friend from North Carolina says.

Mr. RANSOM. Partially.

Mr. DAWES. They have every opportunity, the Senator from Georgia says, for public schools; their children attend the public schools almost as much, if not quite as much, as the white children do.

Mr. RANSOM. Now, Mr. President, the Senator and I come face to face. He asks me again, and asks for an answer, in the face of this statement by his republican friends and party associates, in the face of the statement made by the most intelligent colored men in North Carolina, in the face of the universal statement made by democrats from that State, why is it that these colored people are going away. I answer and tell him that they are imposed upon, they are deluded, they are fooled; and I ask him to tell the country why it is that they go to Indiana.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, they are imposed upon; they are deluded! What is the imposition; what is the delusion, if they enjoy all their rights at home? Who makes a man believe he is deprived of his rights who knows he is enjoying them? Who deceives them?

What is it that they are deceived in? Is it in the fact that they do not enjoy political rights, or is it in the fact that they do not enjoy the rights of every other citizen to acquire property and to the fulfillment of contracts and the protection of life and property like other men?

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me again?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. RANSOM. It happens that the most ignorant of them are the ones who are deluded. The intelligent colored men of North Carolina, the men whose statement you can rely upon, all tell their colored brethren not to go. And because I have said here that these people were improving, because I have said they enjoy advantages of education and all their political and personal rights, what is to be thought of the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts, who assumes that I have said the colored people were so smart and so intelligent that they could not be fooled? I have never intimated such a thing; I have never dreamed of it. On the contrary, I have the evidence before my eyes that they are now being fooled, and very sadly fooled at that.

Mr. DAWES. So I understand, Mr. President; so I have repeated; so I have accepted the declaration of the Senator. The Senator now says that it is only a portion of these people who are so deluded and deceived, and that is the ignorant and weak, but that the intelligent and influential colored people of his State are not so deceived. But is there any considerable body of the free citizens of North Carolina who have lived there these last ten years, or indeed ever since the war, in such abject ignorance and poverty and degradation, in spite of all this improvement held out and proffered and tendered to them, that they even do not know their opportunities there, and are induced by some such wild statements as the Senator from Minnesota made here a year ago—so ignorant themselves that they cannot read, many of them I suppose—to take up their line of march without money enough to get further than the city of Washington, and endure all the hardships and privations and toils and disappointments and sufferings attendant upon such travel under a delusion that they can better their condition in Indiana or any other State? Last year when an attempt to stop emigration was made the trouble was that they were going to Kansas. Now, some of them seem to have been attracted to Indiana. The law which moves them is a law that my friend from North Carolina no more than myself can have any control over. A man in the United States of common intelligence will seek to better his condition as long as he has life and energy and hope; and no considerable body of men in any State will take up their homes and their household gods and move to another State or plant a colony in the unsettled regions of the West unless they are impelled by a rational and intelligent expectation that they are going to better their condition; and now, whether that expectation arises in North Carolina from one motive, in Tennessee from another, in Massachusetts from another, in Georgia from another, it is the law that governs the American people, and the only stay to it is to attempt in our domestic policy, each of us within the borders of our own State, to make life there so attractive, so useful to those who enjoy it, that they will have no temptation to seek a home elsewhere. If my friend from North Carolina will take that in kindness from me, and look into the philosophy of the law which governs this subject, and address himself to such means as will make North Carolina and all its latent energies and hidden wealth tend to develop and tend to present attractive opportunities to those who live there, and to those who do not live there to go and make a home there, and to make them find when they are there, no matter whether they come from abolition Massachusetts or from any other State, that they go to a home where they are welcome, and that the opportunities and facilities that exist in North Carolina are theirs in common and free enjoyment with all the citizens of North Carolina, there will be no complaint that men are emigrating in any body from that State. I do not mean to charge at all that there is any lack of this in North Carolina. The Senator from North Carolina shall not provoke me into an attack upon his State or its institutions, or its people or their treatment of one another. I look upon this as a great question, not applicable to North Carolina alone, not applicable to the State of Tennessee or the State of Massachusetts——

Mr. RANSOM. I know the Senator does not mean the inference that his remark is liable to. I know the Senator cannot think and will not say that I have endeavored to provoke him into any attack upon North Carolina.

Mr. DAWES. Of course if the Senator says he did not intend to, he did not.

Mr. RANSOM. I said nothing the Senator could have construed in that way.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator says he did not intend to do it, he did not so intend; and I want him to understand as fully and as frankly from me that I have not intended any such thing in any remark I have made either in my seat or on the floor. I wish I could discuss this question without its particular application to the State of North Carolina or any other State. It is a great question, the question of emigration to this country and migration from State to State in this country. It makes more homogeneous the population of this country, makes more stable its institutions, gathers around them braces and supports from all parts of the country, and is one great hope of its perpetuity. I wish the people of the South could dwell with the people of the North and the people of the North with the people of the South, and the people of the East with the people of the West, and the people of the West with the people of the East. Then with common instincts and common purposes and common hopes and common efforts they would all alike stand around common institutions, and those institutions would be safe.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the fact that the Senate is weary of this discussion, and therefore I shall be very brief in what I want to say.

The Senator from North Carolina addressed himself for nearly half an hour to myself, apparently criticising some attack which he seemed to imagine I had made upon his State. I want to say to that honorable Senator that neither in the amendment which I offered nor in the remarks which I made did I once refer to the State of North Carolina. If anybody owes an apology to the Senator from North Carolina for an attack upon his State it is the honorable Senator from Indiana. He was the only Senator upon this floor who assumed that anything of this kind existed in North Carolina, and he made that assumption the ground upon which he demanded an investigation. The amendment I offered did not mention the name of the honorable Senator's State, and in discussing it I was particular not to mention it; and yet, instead of addressing himself to the honorable Senator from Indiana and criticising him for attacking his State, he addressed myself, who had been guilty of no offense whatever in that direction, and I say now——

Mr. RANSOM. Nothing can be more gratifying to me than to hear that from the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator would have been equally gratified without my making the remark if he had simply read the RECORD to-morrow containing what I have said. The Senator does me a very high honor. I am an exceedingly modest man. The great difficulty I have always encountered in the Senate and in the House of Representatives has been my modesty; and to-day I think that modesty has been more shocked than at almost any other time in my public life. The Senator pays me a compliment never yet due to any mortal man so far as I know. Peter the Hermit and Moses himself could hardly have been entitled to the extraordinary compliment by which he has honored me to-day. He and the honorable Senator from Georgia paints a most glowing picture of the happiness of the negroes in their southern homes, their prosperity, their contentedness, and the generous and humane treatment they received from almost everybody. Why, sir, according to these Senators, there were five millions of them in the midst of their old friends, living in harmony and blissful content with their old masters, daily growing richer and more intelligent, school-houses and churches going up on every hill-top for their benefit, $5,000,000 having been accumulated since the war by the race in a single State; the race able to earn more in three days out of six than the white race could earn in the entire week; and yet in the midst of all that contentment and prosperity an humble individual like myself suddenly enters upon the scene, makes a speech of an hour in length in the Senate, when lo! the scene changes, a whole race is convinced that this happiness and prosperity is a sham, and by tens of thousands they start for new homes, in an untried and distant country, alleging as they go that they are driven out by cruel and unjust treatment on the part of those very humane and philanthropic persons whose lives seem to have been devoted mainly to making the negro happy.

Mr. President, Peter the Hermit had to make a good many speeches before he could start the crusades. I came in here in my modest way, simply suggested a committee of inquiry as to whether we could not settle our sectional disputes by the voluntary emigration of a portion of the colored race from the South by organizing a territory to which they could go. I argued that question, and presented the reasons why I thought sectionalism would be eliminated from politics thereby; and, lo and behold, almost the entire African population at the South, as if moved by an irresistible impulse, began to talk about migrating to escape evils which they never thought of until I deluded them by that wonderful speech. So says the Senator from North Carolina. When the Senator from Massachusetts asked him to explain why it is that these people go, he answers it is because the Senator from Minnesota in a little remark made upon an appropriation bill, and subsequently in a speech delivered on that subject, put the idea into their heads, and all at once these innocent, well-treated, loving people, who were so contented with their homes and doing so well, suddenly start off by thousands and tell hideous tales of outrage and suffering to which they have been exposed. If this statement be true, and I have no doubt he believes it to be true, and if the statements made by other Senators are true, surely, if measured by its results, it must have been the most remarkable speech on record.

I want to show the Senator, as he is seeking for the cause of this thing and attributing so much to that speech, that long before it was delivered there was a much stronger presentation of the subject made by the honorable Senator from Delaware, now in his seat, [Mr. BAYARD,] and the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] and Mr. Frank P. Blair, of Missouri. Those gentlemen were appointed some seven years ago to investigate certain charges of outrage in the South; I think it was the Ku-Klux investigation. They spent a long time in that country. They went among their friends and party associates and thoroughly examined that question; they took evidence of a great many witnesses, and when they came back what did they tell the negroes of the South and the whole country? They said:

> The truly sincere and rational humanitarian looks with sorrow upon the future status of the poor, deluded negro; for, in the near state of things which is to come, when the two great parties which now exist shall have passed away, he sees either the exodus or the extinction of this disturbing element in the social and political condition of the more powerful race.

Here was the unanimous report of a democratic committee, telling the negroes that the only alternative for them was "exodus" or "extinction." The negro took the hint. When he was told by the honorable Senator from Delaware and the honorable Senator from Kentucky that he must either leave or die, he thought it was best to leave. He has had about enough of the "extinction," and he seems now inclined to try the "exodus."

Why does not the honorable Senator from North Carolina go back a little to this report made seven years ago by his own party friends, in which much stronger language was used than can be found in that speech which he says caused this exodus? I am not trying to evade any responsibility for it. There is not one word uttered in that speech but what I would repeat to-day, not one word that is not true, as I believe. I made no attack on the Senator's constituents then; I made no attack on anybody in the South except upon those men who committed the most diabolical massacre that history records—I mean the Chisholm massacre in the State of Mississippi. I made no attack upon anybody else.

The whole pith and point of that speech was just this, that so long as human nature was what it is, and there was a majority of colored people in certain States or congressional districts of the South, so long there would be trouble in those districts, because the white people would not permit the colored people to rule them; that their hatred of "negro rule" was the one thing which they could not or would not overcome. And that if by reason of the voluntary distribution of the people from districts where a majority of colored people existed that fear of negro rule could be removed, then this prejudice against the colored race would be removed also, and that the negro, as a voter, would then stand in Mississippi and in other States where there are colored majorities precisely as they do now in Maryland, in Delaware, in West Virginia—that they would soon become an element in politics, to be protected and courted by both sides, precisely as they have been in old Virginia recently. I suggested it as a proper subject of inquiry merely. I advised no negro to go. Now I say they have a perfect right to go to Indiana, to Minnesota, to Kansas, or any place else where any free American citizen wishes to go.

The Senator from North Carolina has several times urged upon the Senator from Massachusetts this question: Why do these people go to Indiana? I will answer that question. Because they want to go to Indiana. That is reason enough; but I will answer it further. The Senator smiles. If there were anything political in this movement, what does the Senator think of these facts? From seven to ten thousand of them went to Kansas, where everybody knows there is forty thousand republican majority.

Mr. INGALLS Sixty thousand.

Mr. WINDOM. Well, sixty thousand republican majority. So far as I know, not five hundred have gone to the democratic State of Indiana. Now, if there are any parties behind this thing moving and directing this emigration for political purposes, why did they direct from seven to ten thousand of them into republican Kansas and only four or five hundred thus far into Indiana?

The Senator from Indiana and my friend from North Carolina were not at all alarmed, so far as the States of the North were concerned, when these thousands were moving last spring to Kansas, but when four or five hundred select that grand and attractive State of Indiana the party seems to be terror-stricken. My honorable friend from Indiana never thought of investigating the invasion of Kansas by the seven to ten thousand; but the few who have moved to Indiana seem to inspire him with terror.

I can tell the Senator what my information is as to why they have gone to Indiana. An organization existed in his State looking to the emigration of the colored race. Why it existed I will not now say; I do not know. I am only informed that such is the fact. These colored people sent two colored men to act as their agents, in finding new homes. They went into the State of Indiana and elsewhere and they were so pleased with that State, so well represented by the honorable Senator across the way, that they selected it as their home and were offered employment if they would come there. They went back and reported that employment could be had; and that Indiana, though democratic, was a good State to move to, and a few of them have gone. That is the whole story as I am informed. But why does the Senator from North Carolina think it so strange they should go to Indiana? Is there anything so offensive, so obnoxious in Indiana that he thinks nobody would want to go there, unless persuaded to do so for political purposes? I think the honorable Senator from North Carolina owes an apology to the honorable Senator from Indiana for attacking his State rather than that the apology should come from the other side. I feel quite confident that the Senator from Indiana is waiting to apologize to the Senator from North Carolina for the attack upon his State contained in the original resolution, and I therefore yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. VOORHEES. My apology will consist in stating for the second time that the Senator knows perfectly well that I never assumed in my resolution what he says I assumed; that is, that these people are treated with injustice and cruelty in North Carolina. He knows that the only assumption of fact is what the resolution states, that it is currently alleged that they are thus treated, and therefore I ask for an investigation. Whether I believe that statement to be true or not is another question; but I do not intend to be tempted now into the field of debate upon that matter. But with all the skill and acumen the Senator from Minnesota has, he cannot pretend that he is ignorant of what is assumed in the resolution and what is not. It is not assumed that the people of North Carolina have treated this race with injustice and cruelty; it is assumed, however, that they have been charged with such treatment—that is all; and instead of apologizing to the Senator from North Carolina, I have no apology to make to him at all. On the contrary, I propose to investigate an accusation against his State that he demands no apology for.

I might have much to say upon other points, but I do not desire to embark in debate at this time, and the Senator from Minnesota can have all that field now to himself. What may come hereafter is another matter. I think that I can speak for Indiana upon some points that have been thrown out here, but I will not detain the Senate now. I do not intend to be placed in the false position of assuming in resolutions that these people have been treated unjustly and cruelly in the South. There is no assumption or statement of fact expressed or implied in the resolution, except that it is alleged against the people of the South that they are treating the colored people with injustice and cruelty, and therefore I ask this investigation.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, the resolution of the Senator says "it is currently alleged."

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, "currently alleged."

Mr. WINDOM. In the first place it says:

> Large numbers of negroes from the Southern States, and especially from the State of North Carolina, are emigrating to the Northern States, and especially to the State of Indiana.

That the Senator states as a fact, and then he assumes, he says—

> Whereas it is currently alleged that they are induced to do so—

To do what? Induced to leave the South and induced to leave the State of North Carolina by reason of—> the unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens toward them in the South.

Now, here is a current allegation which he quotes as the very foundation of his resolution, which must have had such currency and which must have had such weight, I assume, upon the mind of the honorable Senator that he thought many people would believe it, or else he would not have proposed to investigate it. He assumes that it has that currency, that it has that weight in the public mind that it is worth while to investigate it. I fancy from the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Indiana that this proposition to investigate it is not to prove, even if it exists, this current allegation, but to show that it does not exist, for when I propose, if you do prove it, to do something about it, you say that is assuming something. On the other hand, then, you assume that it does not exist; it is denied on the floor that there is any such thing proved; and yet you propose to investigate it. The very party that proposes to investigate it charges that there is nothing in it, and I apprehend intends to prove that there is nothing in it, if it can find witnesses who will so swear. But I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have no desire to prolong the discussion. I think much more has been said than is either wise or proper; but I desire to say one thing. The Senator from Minnesota has called attention to a report made by a committee of Congress sent out in the year 1871, I think, of which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] were members, in which they said in effect that the destiny of the negro was "exodus or extinction." It ought to be remembered by that Senator that at the time this committee went South, in almost every Southern State the republican party was in control and had been for several years through their carpet-bag agents, and the condition of things was deplorable. A set of men had gone down there and taken possession at a time when a large portion of the white men were disfranchised and all the negroes indiscriminately enfranchised, and they sought to use the poor uneducated colored race for the purpose of political and pecuniary gain for themselves, and they sought to accomplish that purpose by keeping up a perpetual irritation between the races, white and black, by seeking to make the colored people believe that the white people were their enemies; and their only object in doing it was to give themselves an opportunity of robbing and plundering both races. Every dollar we raised for the public education of whites and blacks in Georgia was appropriated by these people to their own use. The colored people could not prosper nor, indeed, could the whites either, in such a condition of affairs.

In that condition of things that report was written. I say here, with a conscious sense of the obligations resting on me, that I do believe if those governments had continued over those States, sustained as they were by the military power of the United States under republican rule, the destiny of the negro would have been inevitably exodus or extinction. Nothing has saved the colored race but the fact that the people who then had control of those States have been driven out of that control; and the colored people know it, the colored people see it; the colored people see that that has been their salvation; the statistics I gave the Senate this morning from the State of Georgia were given for that purpose. During the three years those people had control of the government of Georgia not a colored man was educated, nor was a colored man fortunate enough to progress in material improvement in any sense. It would have been exodus or extinction; but they were saved, saved because the governments of those States passed into the hands of intelligence and virtue and property. As a friend reminds me, the moneys that were appropriated for the schools in Georgia were actually taken to pay the members of a republican Legislature a most extravagant per diem. But, sir, when those governments passed away, and gentlemen took possession of the State governments who were interested in building up the black and white race alike, who were interested in the prosperity of everybody in the country, then everybody in the country prospered; black and white prospered alike, and the results I have given to the Senate. And they are not results stated by me, they are official results which appear on the official records of the State of Georgia, and they are true.

Now, the Senator from Minnesota says, notwithstanding all that, there are a great many colored people leaving some portions of the Southern States. Why is it? I stated in the first remarks I made that, in spite of all the benefits we had extended to those people, in spite of the fact that they have equal protection under the law, absolutely equal protection, and many of them have availed themselves of the protection extended and have improved both in education and material prosperity to an extent I was not prepared to believe they would, which I confess, nevertheless I said to the Senate what is true, that a large proportion of the colored race is thriftless and worthless; they do not avail themselves of these privileges; they gather about cities and towns; and every man who lives in that country knows that they live by every means that is improper, and live poorly at that. They are restless, they are dissatisfied, they are ready to go anywhere where something is promised them without labor. They can be induced to get up an excitement at any time in the way of emigration.

I make charges on nobody; I simply say it is the work of individuals; I will not say it is the work of the great republican party of the North, but I will say that we do have evidence that republican political agents have been among them for the purpose of creating dissatisfaction and getting them to emigrate by making wild promises of what they could get in Kansas and now what they can get in Indiana. I have seen colored people myself who have said that these agents have told them that by going to Kansas or some Northern State the Government would give them land, and the Government would give them the first year's support, and the Government would equip their farms for them, and some of them said they were in addition to that to get fabulous wages. It would astonish the Senate if I were to tell them what some of these poor people have said was whispered into their ears by these agents. What the motives of the agents are I do not know; but we believe that in the year preceding a presidential election and a new census there are men in the South, black and white, who would try to stir up these people, many of them who are thus thriftless and worthless, to go to the North for the purpose of increasing the republican vote in certain doubtful States and in lessening southern representative population. It may be true or it may be false. I do not mean to charge one way or the other. But these colored people, as every man who knows them knows, are a very credulous race, especially when they are thriftless, especially when they are worthless, especially when they are not willing to provide for themselves by honest labor. They are willing to listen to the whispers of anybody who will tell them that in some distant country they can live and live splendidly without labor. It has been even represented to them that they should be on a perfect social equality with the whites in those States to which they have been invited to go. I will not say these things are true. I am not going to make a political attack; but I do say these statements have been made; we know they have been made. They have stirred up this dissatisfaction. I regret it; we regret it, and everybody ought to regret it. I will not charge any party with it. I state the facts as they are. But these people, I say, are credulous; many of them, in the language of the Senator from North Carolina, are deluded, deluded by these means, deluded by these visionary promises, and we all know that many of them who have gone there under these delusive promises are now wending their way back in absolute want and poverty; and it is but a question of time which shall be the largest tide of emigration, those who are going buoyed up by the delusive hope of these designing persons who are deceiving them or the tide of those coming back under a sad realization of their deception and falsehood.

Notwithstanding all that, I deprecate this discussion as wholly unnecessary. So far as I am concerned, as I said before, while I did not vote for this resolution, yet, as the people of the South are charged with being guilty of cruel and unjust treatment to these colored people as the cause of this exodus, which I know to be untrue, I will not oppose it. If we vote against it gentlemen will say we are afraid of the investigation. Have your investigation if you want it. Have it if you see proper. I do not believe in these perpetual investigations by Congress; but if you choose to have it, have it, but wait until the facts come in before you indulge in these charges, direct or implied, against the southern people.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I do not sympathize with what is known as the exodus movement. I believe that anything like a transfer of the negro population of the South to the North en masse would be injurious to the negroes, injurious to the North, injurious to the South, and inflict upon the communities where they might go burdens that they could not sustain. But an observation made by the Senator from Georgia renders it necessary that I should make a single remark. It is a historic fact that so far as this movement has been organized hitherto, the great bulk of the migration has been toward the State which I represent. The exodus of the colored people to Kansas up to this time has been the great fact to which the attention of the country has been called. The emigration to Indiana is an incident, trivial, inconsequential, compared with that great movement from the lower portion of the Mississippi Valley that poured its deluge upon our plains in the early part of the current year. Not less than seven thousand of those people under some great controlling impulse abandoned their homes, their possessions, their associates, and came to Kansas for the purpose of seeking homes and identifying themselves with a new people.

Now, sir, it has been repeatedly stated during this debate to-day by the Senator from Georgia and by the Senator from North Carolina that there was some secret, sinister, mysterious political influence by which these people were sought to be transferred from the South for the purpose of overcoming democratic majorities in the North. It is a sufficient answer to that to call attention to what has been stated so well by the Senator from Minnesota, that the republican majority of Kansas is far greater than that of any other State in the Union.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me a moment, I desire to be explicit—perhaps I was not—on this subject. I believe that the exodus, to which he alludes, a year ago, when the direction was to Kansas, did not have this political significance. I watched as well as I could the reasons given for the dissatisfaction of the colored people and the inducement offered them to go to Kansas. I did not discover that it was political, so far as affecting the vote of Kansas was concerned; but I do believe it was in a large measure due to dissatisfied persons in the South, in Mississippi especially, who had been defeated for political offices there. I will say to the Senator that when I spoke of the fact of the emigration being intended to affect political results, as some people believe, I did not make the charge; but a great many do believe it, and that is the testimony of some of the colored people now. I referred to the belief that this emigration has been seized upon by persons since that time, by these political agents who have gone through the South, and they are diverting this emigration to Indiana for the purpose I suggested. I do not believe that the purpose of the emigration to the Senator's State was to control the political majority in that State; but I will state to him further that I do believe, and we have reason for believing, that one other political object of this attempted exodus of the negro population from the South was to lessen the population of the South so as to affect southern representation in Congress under the next census. We believe that a great many have had that purpose in view. That threat has been openly made. I tell the Senator from Kansas that threat has been made to the South frequently, that the negroes would be induced to leave the South and thereby deprive the Southern States of the additional representation that they acquired in Congress and in the electoral college by reason of the enfranchisement of the colored race. It was a visionary scheme, I grant. I believe, though, that to a certain extent it operated, and that persons seeking to accomplish these various political ends made false representations to these colored people, and thereby excited them. Of course I do not suppose that all the mass of negroes who went there would change the political complexion of the Senator's State.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course the remarks of the Senator from Georgia exonerate him fully from the inference that I was drawing; but it was not alone in a political sense that it was declared that improper influences were being brought to bear upon the colored people of the South to induce them to leave their homes in Mississippi and Louisiana and emigrate to the Western and Northwestern States. It was stated, as he himself has said to-day, that agents were at work throughout the Southern States circulating documents that conveyed delusions, promises that could not be fulfilled, holding out to them solicitations that were unwarranted, in consequence of which they were induced to leave their homes and take their residence in the North.

Mr. President, we have in Kansas an association called the Kansas Freedman's Relief Association, through whom this emigration was controlled after its arrival, by whom efforts were made to so distribute it in different portions of the State that the emigrants might receive employment. In various ways assistance was extended to these people to save them from the consequences of their own improvidence. They took a large amount of testimony. I have myself conversed with a great many of the emigrants, and I say to the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from North Carolina that I have yet to see or hear of the first colored man who left the South under any other anticipation than that he might get protection for his political and civil rights and a fair day's wages for an honest day's work.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me? A great many black people have migrated from the State of Tennessee to Kansas. Recently from my own town, the village of Clarksville, not less than one hundred went to his State. Will the Senator say that he has ever heard of a single emigrant from Tennessee who complained that he was not protected in that State in his life, his liberty, and in his property?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Tennessee misunderstood me. I said I had yet to find the first emigrant from the South who did not say that he came to the State of Kansas for the purpose of obtaining protection of his political and civil rights and a fair day's wages for an honest day's work. I made no imputation against any State. I said that if any delusion was brought to bear upon these people, it was the delusion that they might be able to better their condition. I have conversed, as I stated, with a great many of them. There are colonies all over my State. There are colonies up the Arkansas Valley. There is a colony in Graham County, which has a post-office called Nicodemus, where there are some four or five hundred colored emigrants, I think from Tennessee and Kentucky. They are a self-sustaining, industrious, law-abiding class of people, who came there as any other emigrants come, for the purpose of bettering their condition, and for nothing else; and when these statements are made——

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the Senator to intimate that they were compelled to flee from the South in order to gain the protection or freedom that exists in Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not say that. I certainly had no intention of conveying that idea at all. In the debate that was had here last spring we were told that agents were traversing the South with chromos depicting the delights to which they would be welcomed when they came to Kansas, that they would have forty acres of ground and white servants to wait on them, and a mule, and a coon-dog, and everything else that conduces to the happiness of the African mind.

Mr. President, I took the opportunity, man by man, as I had occasion, to talk with emigrants from every State represented in this exodus, and I never found a man who did not come there with the desire of getting fair wages for an honest day's work. There never was one, so far as my observation goes, who did not come there for the purpose of going to work and getting a home for himself and his family and enjoying the privileges of education and protection in his political rights. There was one man from Georgia—I call the attention of the Senator to this fact—who, when I asked him what the condition of affairs was in that State, corroborated very largely what that Senator has said about the educational advantages there. He said the democracy had made liberal provision for the education of the colored people, that they had a good public-school system, that they had a university, but he said that there was a convict system in operation in Georgia that was practical slavery. He alluded to one instance within his knowledge where a negro, for the offense of stealing a biscuit, was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, and a white man who had shot a negro in cold blood in the same town was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. He alleged that there were thirteen hundred convicts at that time in Georgia, and of those there were only just white men enough to be overseers over the rest, and that they were farmed out on the plantations in gangs, and kept by overseers exactly as they were in the days of slavery, and that the lessees were getting rich upon that system of convict labor. He complained of it. He said that was one of the reasons why the colored people in that part of the South desired to leave; that they were not equal under the law; that the laws were not equally administered; that there was one law for the white man and another for the black man. With regard to North Carolina and other States, similar complaints are made, not that there is systematic personal violence, but that there is a practical inequality of political rights and rights under the law that compelled them to move as any other people would move under similar circumstances.

Now, sir, I say again that I do not sympathize with this movement. I believe it is injurious; I believe it is harmful to the South and the North; that this great problem which confronts us must be wrought out as all other great problems are, by time and mutual forbearance and calm judgment. But when the assertion is repeatedly made that these men are seduced by agents sent from Kansas or elsewhere for the purpose of changing political majorities, that improper representations are made, and that they are the victims of unscrupulous imposition, I feel that I must rise to resent the imputation, because I speak from observation of vast numbers of these people who have emigrated, and from personal familiarity with the statements that have been made to me by many colored men from different States whose opinions I am sure are entitled to entire confidence.

Mr. McMILLAN. May I ask the Senator from Kansas what the condition of the emigrants is who have gone into his State?

Mr. INGALLS. The emigrants who have gone to the State of Kansas, numbering about seven thousand, went there for the avowed purpose of going to work. They asked nothing but a chance to go to work. They did not ask for farms; they did not ask for mules nor for servants to wait upon them; they wanted to go to work on farms, to saw wood, to do anything that would enable them to earn the little pittance necessary to keep their families together. They have been distributed over all portions of the State as farm hands wherever they could be employed; and, so far as I have heard, they are industrious and obedient; they are giving satisfaction to their employers, and are contented with their condition. If any considerable number have ever expressed a desire to leave the State and return to those from which they emigrated, it has not come to my knowledge.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, the colored man the Senator met in Kansas made a pretty fair statement to that Senator, according to the Senator's report of it, but it was incorrect in some particulars. I am only astonished that the Senator from Kansas put the interpretation upon the colored man's statement which he seems to have placed upon it. For instance, he seems to state it as a wonderful monstrosity that there was a system of convict labor in Georgia which was equivalent to slavery or like slavery. Now, the convict labor in Georgia is precisely like the convict labor in every other State where there is a penitentiary; there is no difference. I thought the Senator from Kansas was lawyer enough to know that in this country servitude for crime was recognized by the Constitution.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator from Georgia does not intend to trifle with this.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. INGALLS. I merely made that observation for the purpose of showing what impression was in the mind of my informant as to the injustice he complained of in Georgia. I was not giving my view of it, but the view of my informant.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. But how is it an injustice in Georgia to make a convict work whether he wants to or not? Convicts are made to work everywhere.

Mr. INGALLS. That is very true; but the statement made by my informant was that the convicts sent to the penitentiary for a long term of years for trivial offenses were farmed out to contractors who kept them upon remote plantations, chained them together, subjected them to the most cruel hardships by inhuman overseers, and in that respect they were treated with inequality before the law.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the colored man said to the Senator from Kansas that there was one law for the punishment of larceny by a white man in Georgia, and another law for the punishment for larceny by a colored man, he said what was not true.

Mr. INGALLS. He did not say that.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The law is the same. We have precisely the same law in Georgia in every respect for the colored man and for the white man, and the terms of punishment are precisely the same for the white man and the black man. If a man commits a larceny in Georgia and is sentenced to the penitentiary, he has to work under overseers, whether he is white or black.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator explain the instance stated by the Senator from Kansas, where the murder of a negro was punished by imprisonment for two years, and a petty theft stated by the Senator from Kansas by a black man was punished by ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. There is not one particle of truth in the statement. If the parties were convicted of the same crime they met the same punishment. I think I can see that the negro did not draw the distinction that the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Kansas ought readily to have drawn; and that is, that in all the States and under the common law there are differences in punishment for one convicted of the principal crime and one as a mere accessory to it. Doubtless, too, the negro did not know the difference between murder and manslaughter. There may have been occasions of that sort. Besides, the convicted colored man may have taken nothing but a biscuit, so far as I know, in the case alluded to; but I suppose if you would get the record of that case, you would find that that colored man was convicted of burglary, and not larceny. The colored man did not draw the distinction between burglary and larceny. I need not tell the Senator that burglary is the breaking into and entering a house with intent to steal therefrom, or commit a felony therein. The crime is committed if he breaks and enters, whether he gets a biscuit or not. If he breaks and enters the house with intent to steal, he is guilty of burglary; and if he did it at night-time the crime is greater than if he did it in the day-time; and I presume if you examine into the character of that case you will find that that is just the truth.

But I will state to the Senator again, and I want the country to know it, that the colored man gets in every respect in Georgia equal justice with the white man.

One more word. The Senator from Kansas said that there were thirteen hundred convicts in the penitentiary in Georgia, and a large majority of them, I think he said all but about two hundred, were colored men. There is a great deal of truth in that. That is a fact. The proportion of men who are convicted of crime in Georgia, I am sorry to say, especially of these offenses of burglary and larceny, largely predominate with the colored race. It is not because there is any disposition on the part of the white people to do them injustice, but because there is an unfortunate proclivity in that race to commit these crimes. Just as I said a moment ago these thriftless and worthless colored people, that are unwilling to work on plantations and earn a good living by hard labor, gather about the towns and cities and live from hand to mouth and by every means possible. They, we all know, give police officers and everybody else an immense deal of trouble. They do commit a great many of these offenses, and the only way to protect ourselves from them when we detect them and convict them is to punish them; and that is not peculiar to Georgia, if I understand it.

Of these colored people, whatever may be their motive, the fact is true that three or four colored people will commit these crimes where one white man does. There are as many white people in the penitentiary of Georgia now as there were before the war. Before the war the number of our convicts in the penitentiary, being altogether white, (no colored men then being sent to the penitentiary for crimes of that sort,) was only from one hundred and fifty to two hundred. There was then some such small number of people in the penitentiary, and we kept them confined within walls and compelled them to do work within walls because there were few of them. We have just about as many white men now. White men commit crimes just about as they did; but under the emancipation rule, where the colored man is a free man and liable to the same punishment that the white man receives, he has to go to the penitentiary; and a great many of them, I am sorry to say, are going, but they go chiefly from the class to which I allude, and it is unfortunately a very common thing there. To go to the penitentiary is one of the fruits of freedom and equality.

That condition of things has necessitated a system of confinement which did not obtain before the war. As I have said, when the number of convicts was small we could confine them within walls without any difficulty and keep them employed, always there, though, let me say to the Senator from Kansas, under overseers. I never heard of a penitentiary being conducted without overseers in my life. But since the war, when the number has increased from one or two hundred convicts in the penitentiary to thirteen hundred, and we all apprehend it will go still higher, it became almost impossible to keep these convicts in any one penitentiary within walls; there were too many. You cannot keep them employed; it is impossible; and that is a question which has troubled the southern people very much.

Georgia is trying an experiment, it is but an experiment, by which we farm them out. That is to say, persons lease these convicts, white and black alike, there is no difference, and work them on farms, on railroads, in mines, and on public works of various kinds. My own opinion is, and I have so advised the people of Georgia, that we ought to work them on public works altogether, but a majority have differed with me, and they adopted a system by which they are farmed out to planters. One of my nearest neighbors, that is in the region of the State where I plant myself, has a large number of these convicts on plantations.

Now, I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that the colored convicts, a majority of them, a large portion of them certainly, are delighted with this change. They would much rather work out in the open fields, in the open air, on farms, at labor to which they are accustomed, than to be kept in close confinement. They much prefer it. I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that it is a literal truth that in the case of the very gentleman to whom I refer, who is a gentleman in every sense and who has charge of these convicts, so kind is his treatment, so considerate is his treatment, that convicts whose terms have expired have been known to ask him to continue them in his employ in this same method. Of course these cases are few and exceptional. With a great many of our people the question arises now whether in truth when they get into the hands of persons such as the one of whom I am speaking the punishment is sufficient to deter them from crime. We punish convicts to deter them from repeating the commission of crimes. We have known colored people in Georgia to commit crimes—your trivial crimes of burglary and larceny—for the express purpose of getting back into the penitentiary. That is true. These cases, too, are few and exceptional.

But I will say, at the same time, that is not true of all those who farm these convicts. There is a difference. Some have had these convicts in charge who have been charged with cruel treatment. The Legislature took the subject under consideration at the last session, and I am sure the gentlemen on the other side would be delighted to know the determination on the part of the representatives of the people to remedy the evil if it existed. If it did exist I think it has been remedied, for the people of Georgia are determined that no injustice, no cruelty, no improper treatment shall be visited on these people, even though they be criminal. Unjust punishments they will not allow. In some cases where that charge was made the matter was thoroughly investigated by the Legislature. But in the case to which I allude it is a literal truth. A gentleman whom I know well, and the only one I do know who has anything to do with these convicts, at least whose management I know anything about, is exceedingly kind to them. You talk about their overseers; the colored people go to the fields under what are called "trusties," convicts themselves—often colored convicts—whom the manager is willing to trust, and he sends them miles away, driving wagons, without any chains upon them. The great trouble in some respects with some men is the question whether the punishment is sufficient to deter the convicts from crime.

I will again say, however, that I myself am not satisfied with this system of farming out. It is a problem we have got to solve, what we shall do with these convicts. We desire to treat them humanely; we desire to adopt the best system. We get one man to farm them who does well; another man who farms them does not do so well. The consequence is constant dissatisfaction. What shall be the result I do not know, but this I do know, that the people of Georgia will treat these criminals with all the humanity their situation will permit, and whatever will be the law under any circumstances for the white race will also be the law for the colored race, for there is no distinction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Indiana to modify his resolution by striking out "and especially from the State of North Carolina" and "and especially to the State of Indiana," so as to make the inquiry a general one, without invidious distinctions against North Carolina or in favor of Indiana, or against either.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have a sincere purpose to get the resolution passed, and I would do almost anything that would result in that; but how many more speeches would be grafted on any change I do not know. The resolution as it stands is general and special both. It calls for an investigation of the emigration of negroes from the Southern States, and especially from the State of North Carolina, to the Northern States, and especially to the State of Indiana.

I have the greatest possible esteem for the Senator from Iowa, and I know the tender care and jealous concern he has for the State of North Carolina. He regrets extremely the invidious distinction which I have given here in the resolution. I know the two Senators from North Carolina feel deeply obliged to him, and also to the Senator from Minnesota, for calling upon me to strike out objectionable matter to North Carolina! The North Carolina Senators I have no doubt by this time are satisfied that I am a sort of public enemy to the State of North Carolina. If, however, it would facilitate the action of the Senate upon this question to make the inquiry simply a general one, I would have no objection to it. The reason why North Carolina was especially named, and Indiana likewise, was because a system of emigration has been going on, to my personal knowledge, through this city since I have been here in the last two weeks from North Carolina to Indiana. That is the reason why those two States were mentioned. As a matter of course, if the resolution calls for a general investigation of this subject as to all points South from which emigration is proceeding and as to all points North to which it is tending, it would cover just what the resolution covers now, it would be no change; and if the Senator from Iowa will say to me that with that modification I can get a vote by his assistance this evening I will accept it. That would be an object. I want to make a square trade.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say to the Senator from Indiana that if he will allow the amendment to be made which I have proposed, I shall vote for his resolution, and vote for it without debate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it be made, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana modifies his resolution as suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the Secretary read it as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the resolution as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas large numbers of negroes from the Southern States are emigrating to the Northern States; and

Whereas it is currently alleged that they are induced to do so by the unjust and cruel conduct of their white fellow-citizens toward them in the South, and by the denial or abridgement of their personal and political rights and privileges: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members of this body be appointed by its presiding officer, whose duty it shall be to investigate the causes which have led to the aforesaid emigration, and to report the same to the Senate; and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to sit at any time.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to state briefly the reasons why I shall vote against the resolution, especially after the amendment which the Senator from Indiana has just accepted.

In the first place, I do not believe that the colored people are emigrating from the Southern States to Northern States. It is possible at this time that emigration is going on from North Carolina to Indiana, but I deny that emigration from other Southern States to other Northern States is in progress at all. Such an exodus might have occurred last year, but there is none at present, and therefore I deny the premises.

But, Mr. President, I shall vote against the resolution because I do not consider it a proper and legitimate subject for congressional inquiry. I believe the colored man to be a citizen as I am, to have the same power of volition that I have, to have a right to go where and from whence he pleases without molestation or without congressional aid. If he chooses to leave North Carolina and to go to some State where he can better his fortune, so much the better for him. If he leaves North Carolina and goes to some other State and makes a mistake, and locates in a worse country, so much the worse for him; and he only shares the fate which has met thousands of emigrants before in this country.

I do not think that the subject either of colored or white migration from one section of the country to another or from one State to another forms a proper subject of congressional inquiry, and therefore I shall vote against the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I voted against the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] upon the ground that I was opposed to all this investigation. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] has expressed my views upon this subject entirely. I agree with him that Congress ought not to do anything with this subject at all. With him I do not know that there is any exodus now except from North Carolina to Indiana, but I think it is outside of the proper and legitimate action of Congress to investigate what are the motives that induce these people to go from one State to another. I think it is outside of our legitimate functions and purposes to order congressional investigation upon this subject at all. Suppose you make the inquiry, what will be the result? You will get a report signed by three or four one way and two or three the other, and it will satisfy nobody.

How can you prevent these people from going from one State to another? There is emigration going on all the time. Are we to inquire into the motive of men for going from one place to another? What have we to do with their motive? I do not think we have anything to do with it at all. It agitates the country, gets up political excitement, and does no earthly good.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understand that this resolution comes from our friends on the other side of the Chamber, and it is because they desire the investigation that I am willing to vote for it. It does not come from any desire on my part, I am sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll on the passage of the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) I am paired, at least upon general questions, with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I do not know how he would vote on this question; but, unless my vote should become necessary to make a quorum, I shall decline to vote. I should vote "yea" if I voted at all.

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.]

Mr. MCPHERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.]

Mr. MORRILL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] on all political questions. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On political questions I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] I do not know how he would vote on this resolution, and therefore I refrain from voting.

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] and that pair was left with my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] I see that he observes the pair in his own case, and I will observe it in mine.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not see how this can be a political question. Most of the republicans are voting for the resolution, and most of the democrats are voting the other way; and how it is a political question I should like to know.

Mr. RANSOM. I am governed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. I am inclined to think that if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM. Upon that statement of the Senator I shall vote "yea," which is the vote I should have given.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to announce to the Senate that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] are paired upon this question. I do not know how either Senator would vote. Both are absent from the Chamber.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I was requested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME] to state that he is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] on political questions. I do not know whether this is a political question, or how either of them would vote.

Mr. BECK. My colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] is paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH.]

Mr. COCKRELL. How would your colleague vote?

Mr. BECK. I do not know.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have been requested to announce a pair between the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] and the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] How they would vote I do not know.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let us go into executive session.

Mr. HOAR. Let us get a quorum.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move a call of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] will consent to vote, which may relieve the difficulty. The Senator from Tennessee said that he would vote if necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. PADDOCK. My pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] is upon political questions. I doubt not upon this question he would vote as I should, "yea," and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. If my vote is necessary to make a quorum, I will take the responsibility of recording it.

Mr. RANSOM. I wish this resolution to be passed, but I should like to ask the Chair if it is competent, after a vote has been announced by the Chair, to make a quorum until the yeas and nays have been called again? That is the point of order I suggest.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the rule, I apprehend not.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, and others. By unanimous consent it can be done.

Mr. RANSOM. Of course, if there is no objection, it can be done.

Mr. HARRIS. I propose to record my vote in the affirmative in order to make a quorum.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to receiving the vote of the Senator from Tennessee.

The result was again announced—yeas 27, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allison,	Garland,	McDonald,	Rollins,
Bailey,	Hampton,	McMillan,	Saunders,

BENNINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire as to the propriety of rendering some aid or contribution to the monument proposed to be erected on the revolutionary battle-ground at Bennington, Vermont.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 18, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SARAH E. DUNHAM.

Mr. HAWK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3037) granting a pension to Sarah E. Dunham; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN W. TRAVIS.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3038) for the relief of John W. Travis, postmaster at Hartford, Van Buren County, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. In the New York Tribune of yesterday there is a paragraph reflecting on my character as a Representative of the people. I wish to have the paragraph read and to be heard on it as a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right under the rule.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds I desire at this early stage of the session to say that heretofore this rising to questions of privilege has sometimes been extended to the introduction of remarks of a character entirely irrelevant to the personal explanation. I do not of course mean to apply this to my friend from Iowa, but I mean to say that hereafter when the House accords the privilege to a member to rise to a personal explanation as a question of privilege he must be confined to the personal explanation.

Mr. WEAVER. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa states that the article he has sent to the desk affects his character as a Representative, and the Chair is bound to take his word for that until the contrary appears.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] need not be so sensitive. I send to the Clerk a copy of the New York Tribune, and ask him to read the paragraph I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WEAVER declines to disclose the terms of the resolution, but that is, perhaps, not very important, because his financial views are well known. It is alleged that this gentleman is the author of the numerous petitions which are being received here purporting to come from ex-Union soldiers. These petitions are all alike, and pray for the passage of a law to pay to all discharged soldiers the difference between the value of the greenbacks in which their wages were paid and the value of gold at the time the payments were made. Mr. WEAVER is the medium by which the petitioners communicate with the House.

Mr. WEAVER. There is a very plain imputation there that I am the author of the petitions and that they are spurious. I wish to state to this House that I am not the author of those petitions, neither am I the exclusive medium of their presentation to this House. They are signed by the persons petitioning this Congress with their own hands in every instance, and their residences and the regiments to which they belonged are plainly specified. These petitions have also been received, I am informed, by a large number of members of Congress, and have been placed on record on our files. I hurl back the imputation as a slander by this Wall street journal upon myself and the brave men who have petitioned for equal rights with the holders of Government bonds.

Now, sir, I need not state in conclusion, what is painfully understood by the entire people of the United States, that at the death of Horace Greeley the New York Tribune lost its reputation both for honesty and intelligence.

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter of personal privilege. [Laughter.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I demand the regular order, but am willing to yield for the introduction of bills for reference.

PATENTS.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3039) to amend the statutes in relation to patents for improvements, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

GREEN S. DUKE.

Mr. SPEER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3040) for the relief of Green S. Duke, of Jackson County, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

SANDY HOOK BAR, NEW YORK.

Mr. MULLER, by unanimous consent, introduced (by request) a bill (H. R. No. 3042) to create a permanently deep, wide, and straight channel through Sandy Hook bar at the port of New York, for the purpose of forming an improved commercial outlet; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LOANS ON REAL ESTATE.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3043) to authorize national banks to make loans on real estate; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF SECTION 3412 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. GIBSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3044) to repeal section 3412 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the same being section 122 of the national-bank act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE FREIGHTS AND PASSENGERS.

Mr. ACKLEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3045) for the regulation of interstate freights and passengers and to relieve the same from the restriction of local quarantines; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MYRA CLARK GAINES.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution directing an inquiry into the rents paid by the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

LEAF-TOBACCO.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On the 11th instant, a week ago, I introduced a resolution of inquiry, which was sent to the Committee of Ways and Means. That committee has not made a report, and I ask that the committee be discharged and the resolution adopted.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to this House any information in the possession of that Department showing the number of licensed dealers in leaf-tobacco and the amount of internal revenue collected from such dealers during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, under and by virtue of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, specifying separately the number of retail dealers in leaf-tobacco and the amount of revenue received from such dealers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Under the rules of the House, as I understand, if after six days the committee to which a resolution of inquiry is referred fails to report, then the resolution comes before the House for action.

Mr. CONGER. That matter is before a committee for investigation. I object.

The SPEAKER. The fair construction of the rule is that the committee should report within one week on a resolution calling for departmental information. The gentleman from Illinois desires to call the attention of the House to the fact that the committee has not reported back the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is what I wish to bring to the attention of the House.

Mr. CONGER. That does not give the gentleman the right to introduce a resolution against objection.

The SPEAKER. He does not ask that.

Mr. CONGER. That does not do away with the rule in regard to the introduction of resolutions.

The SPEAKER. No; the breaking of a rule by a committee does not give any right to a member.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the introduction of the resolution to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects; and the Committee of Ways and Means will be kind enough to take notice that the rule requires them to report upon the resolution within one week.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would inquire if I have not the right to ask the House to act upon the resolution, the committee having failed to comply with the rule?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the regular order has been demanded, except as to the introduction of bills for reference. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will refer the Chair to some rule which gives him the right he now seeks to exercise.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have no desire at all to reflect upon the committee.

The SPEAKER. In all probability it is an oversight.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But I appeal to my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to allow this resolution to be adopted. It is simply a resolution for information, nothing more. The Secretary of the Treasury can answer it in a very short time, and I am anxious to obtain the information.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the suggestion to the committee will be sufficient.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. CONGER withdrew his objection.

There being no further objection, the resolution was adopted.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. McLANE asked and obtained unanimous consent that James L. McClure, a member of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, be admitted to the floor of the House for to-day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] to insist upon the regular order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will yield to any member to submit a proposition to the House which can come in by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON (by request) introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

No. 3047) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to designate and prepare a site for a union railroad depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River be authorized to proceed and appoint sub-committees to proceed down the Mississippi River to its mouth, at such times as the committee may determine, for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of its peculiar conditions and wants, and to gather information relative to the best methods for its improvement; that the sub-committee be also authorized to employ a stenographer and to take testimony, and that the expenses be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. GIBSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. MORSE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3053) to repeal Schedule C of the internal-revenue law, act of June 30, 1864; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ARKANSAS.

Mr. SLEMONS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3054) for the adjustment of the claims of the State of Arkansas against the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH TRESSLER.

Mr. COFFROTH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3055) granting a pension to Joseph Tressler; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

GENERAL D. C. THOMAS.

Mr. BICKNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3056) to increase the pension of General D. C. Thomas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

TELEGRAPHIC CONNECTION WITH BLOCK ISLAND.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for present consideration, the bill (S. No. 819) to authorize the laying of a telegraphic cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island. This bill, I am sure, will excite no discussion or opposition.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed. It appropriates $15,000 for the purpose of laying the telegraphic cable, under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, from the mainland of Rhode Island to Block Island, Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation.

FRANK SOULE.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of California, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 244) releasing Frank Soule, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of California, and his sureties from liability on his official bond was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour commences at twenty-five minutes before one o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Agriculture.

SALES OF LEAF-TOBACCO.

Mr. HATCH. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 933) to repeal so much of the sixth clause of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as prohibits farmers and planters from selling leaf-tobacco at retail directly to consumers without the payment of a special tax, and to allow farmers and planters to sell leaf-tobacco of their own production to other persons than manufacturers of tobacco without special tax. I ask that this bill be made a special order——

Mr. CONGER. I desire that the bill may be read, so as to see whether it is subject to a point of order. I wish to reserve any point.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] reports this bill from the Committee on Agriculture, and asks that it may be made a special order—for what day?

Mr. HATCH. For the 13th of January next, after the morning hour, in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. This bill affects the revenues of the Government, and is subject to the point of order that it must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make that point?

Mr. CONGER. I do. I want the bill to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] states that he desires the bill to receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] might modify his proposition so as to make the bill a special order in Committee of the Whole, letting the bill now go there. That would obviate the objection of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HATCH. At what time does the gentleman propose that the bill shall be taken up? Before the recess or afterward?

Mr. CONGER. There would be no great opportunity for the consideration of the bill before the holiday recess so far as I can see. Let it take its place on the Calendar. There are not many bills before this, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. The bill known as the Choctaw bill is a special order for the 13th of January.

Mr. HATCH. I am willing to give the fullest and fairest opportunity for the discussion of the bill. I prefer that the motion I have made should be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects unless the bill be first discussed in Committee of the Whole. His objection affects that part of the motion of the gentleman from Missouri which proposes that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair suggests that the gentleman had better modify that part of his motion.

Mr. DIBRELL. The proposition of the gentleman from Missouri is that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Will not that answer the purpose of the gentleman from Michigan?

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan to object to.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir, that is what I object to.

Mr. HATCH. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan. Let the bill be first discussed in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I apprehend that the fixing of special days for propositions which are to continue from day to day will embarrass us in the consideration of business of a public nature. In this particular case I think the bill had better go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri agrees to that; and the Chair will state the proposition again so that the House may be fully advised. The gentleman from Missouri reports this bill from the Committee on Agriculture, and moves that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and he now asks that it shall be called up as a special order on the 13th day of January, and shall continue from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. What is the effect of that?

The SPEAKER. The effect of adopting the proposition would be that the bill would immediately go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and on the day indicated the Chair would recognize the gentleman from Missouri to move to go into Committee of the Whole to reach that bill.

Mr. CONGER. Does it go on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It goes on the Calendar, of course.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see any particular reason why we should give this bill a preference from day to day over other bills.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Missouri is a practical mode of informing the House that on the day indicated he means to make an effort to have the House go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill. The House at that time by a majority vote can refuse to agree to the motion, which would be practically a vacation of the order.

Mr. CONGER. My proposition is that the benefits of this bill, if it passes, cannot be enjoyed before next summer or next fall. There is plenty of time for its consideration in regular order before it can affect any interests. Therefore if it takes its place on the Calendar that is all that can be asked.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I wish to make another suggestion to my friend from Missouri, that he except reports from the Committee of Ways and Means and reports from the Committee on Appropriations. Otherwise I shall be compelled to object to fixing a day and making it a special order from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to that. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I object to any special order if anything is to be taken by it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to making it a special order at all?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I do object.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I have accepted the suggestion of the gentleman from New York; that does away with naming a day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to its being made a special order at all.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the day named and let it go upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The probability is it will be reached, as there are but few bills there.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of the following bills, in which concurrence was requested:

An act (S. No. 324) for the relief of Somerville & Davis;

An act (S. No. 820) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island; and

An act (S. No. 840) to exempt from taxation competitory prizes won by American citizens in foreign countries.

It further announced the adoption of the resolution that 3,000 copies of the report of the board to test iron, steel, and other metals be printed for the use of Congress—1,000 for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House; in which concurrence was requested.

INTERSTATE MIGRATION.

Mr. STEELE. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 1058) to encourage interstate migration and for other purposes, with a written report; and I ask that the bill and report be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Commissioner of Agriculture be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be prepared and published, from time to time, a report containing all facts and information of any value to immigrants or people seeking a new home; and to embody therein all reliable facts and information in regard to all vacant and unsettled land belonging to the United States Government, railroads, or other corporations.

SEC. 2. That he, if he finds it necessary, shall cause said territory or land to be examined in regard to soil, water, natural resources, and its accessibility by water or railroad, and also, if said land belongs to corporate companies, shall cause the validity of its title to be ascertained, and the result to be embodied in said report.

SEC. 3. That such facts also be embodied therein that will tend to encourage interstate migration of citizens of the United States, and that said report be accompanied with a good map or maps of the various States and Territories indicating the public and private land situate therein open to purchase or settlement.

SEC. 4. That he shall cause to be printed and published also a monthly report containing facts and information in regard to where public or private work of any extent is to be undertaken, the amount of labor required, and a synopsis of wages paid for manual labor, as well as skilled, of the most prominent trades, to be ascertained and noted for the first day of every month, as well as the average price of the most common articles used, namely, farm implements, clothing, and agricultural products, from at least three different localities of each of the various States and Territories; and that said monthly report shall be forwarded to all postmasters for distribution, or to individual citizens upon application, post-free, and at the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

SEC. 5. That all postmasters, collectors, and other employés of the United States Government agencies are, upon reasonable application, hereby directed to furnish, under oath, to the Commissioner of Agriculture, all such facts and information of interest or value from their respective localities required by him for the compiling of the said monthly report.

SEC. 6. That to defray the expenses of collecting the aforesaid facts and information, and preparation of said report, there is hereby appropriated —— dollars, or as much of this amount as will be necessary, subject to the order of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

SEC. 7. This act shall take effect from its passage.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is there any report accompanying that bill?

Mr. STEELE. There is a written report, which I ask to be read.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I make the point of order this involves an appropriation and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEELE. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, and the right of the gentleman from New York to object will be reserved.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred House bill numbered 1058, entitled "A bill to encourage interstate migration and for other purposes," have considered the same, and ask to report it back to the House with a unanimous recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill in question imposes very large additional burdens upon the Commissioner of Agriculture; and while it is clearly within the province of Congress to prescribe the duties of that officer, in the opinion of the committee no labors should be placed upon him unless they are strictly germane to the purposes for which his bureau was established. By the provisions of this proposed statute, he is required, at incalculable expense, trouble, and time, to investigate and report upon the mineral, agricultural, and all other resources of all the lands in all the States and Territories of the United States which, in the will of the owners, may probably or possibly become the subjects of transfer. That the public lands open for entry and settlement should be surveyed and described, so that the Government may be able to effect sales and realize the value thereof, the committee believe would not be objectionable; but they are very far from thinking that it is any part of the duty of the United States to become a broker for the sale of the private property of individuals or of those corporations to which a donation of the public domain has been granted. Apart from the fact that such a course would be a great departure from propriety, if not from legitimate power, the time required for carrying out the provisions of the bill would be extraordinary, and the expense incident thereto would probably far exceed all the appropriations which have ever been made or which ought to be made in the next half century or more for the support of the Agricultural Department.

If the committee have not misconceived the scope of the bill, it is one of the most comprehensive propositions which was ever submitted to the consideration of a deliberative body. So far as the "encouragement of interstate migration" is concerned, that apparently being the leading purpose, the committee can see no great objection to it, if Congress will confine itself to a legitimate and proper mode, which perhaps would be a simple execution of the guarantee of the Constitution, giving "equal rights, privileges, and immunities to the citizens of the several States." But they who own property which they wish to sell should be willing to undergo all the trouble and expense necessary to effect their desires, and thus further what they may judge to be their interests, without calling on either the Federal or State governments to become the agencies by which they can dispose of their estates. Ordinarily the holders of real estate, and especially the large corporations, have found no difficulty in extolling the value of their property and finding purchasers for such parts of it, as have any special advantages, either real or supposed. It would probably be far better for the seller to leave him to his own resources as an auctioneer; because he would, doubtless, see points of attraction which might be invisible to a sworn employé—particularly if he recognized the obligations of an oath that would enable him to indulge in all those venial exaggerations which the possession of property for sale is generally supposed to suggest.

But in investigating the objects of the bill, and seeking an elucidation of any mysteries which may enshroud the suggestive phrase "other purposes," which forms a conspicuous part of the title, the committee have brought into use all their powers of analysis. They have endeavored, in a spirit of fairness, to construe the provisions by giving the language employed a natural interpretation, by which they hoped to ascertain at least a few of the "other purposes" contemplated, having no confidence in their power to understand all of them.

The first section of the bill requires the Commissioner of Agriculture to have "prepared and published, from time to time, a report containing all facts and information of any value to immigrants or persons seeking a new home; and to embody therein all reliable facts and information in regard to all vacant and unsettled land belonging to the United States, railroads, or other corporations." It would be interesting to somebody, we suppose, but hardly to the people of this country generally, to know what the Commissioner might think to be "all facts and information of any value to immigrants" or anybody else. What standard of value would he adopt? Could he say that any "fact" would have no value? Now, as there are in this world more than ten thousand million of facts, the report, if confined to this branch of the subject, would doubtless be a document somewhat voluminous in its character. It would hardly afford much relief to "the horny-handed son of toil" who stands as the embodiment and representative of American agriculture to learn, as he would do, that he was obliged by the second clause of the first section of this bill to "embody all the reliable facts in regard to all the vacant and unsettled lands of the United States, of railroads, and other corporations." The committee may be in error, but it is due to candor to state that they had hitherto supposed all "facts" were "reliable"—at least as "facts;" but whether they are or not, if all "facts" strictly "reliable" should be collated and published, the corporations, the happy recipients of governmental favor, would find, if their chartered existence should last for a thousand years, that they were the owners of more books of "facts" than acres of real estate. To remotely approximate an illustration of the kinds of "reliable facts" which the report would embody, the committee think it would contain "facts" in regard to winter and summer, spring and autumn, humidity and aridity, springs, branches, brooks, rivers, lakes, bays, gulfs, oceans, hills, valleys, mountains, waterfalls, rocks, soil, trees, vegetables, fruits, flowers, grasses, corn, wheat, cotton, potatoes, rye and the distilled juice thereof, cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, horses, mules, (and an animal which our respect for the American Congress forbids us to name,) raccoons, opossums, minks, muskrats, skunks, prairie dogs, "the elephant and the kangaroo," including the occultations of the planets and the respiratory organs of the man in the moon, "the yaller janders" and the "shakin' agur," and more than nine hundred and ninety-nine millions of other "facts" which the committee have not time at present to enumerate. After a careful and laborious calculation, the committee are of the opinon that it would require nearly a thousand years for the present Commissioner, with his well-known energy, to obtain and publish all the "facts," the cost of which would exceed a thousand billions of dollars, and when obtained, though officially "reliable," they would be of little service to the present generation, for at the date of completion of the great work at least one-half of the people and one-third of the present Congress would be dead, despite the attractive forces of official position.

The committee, while acknowledging that although such a labor would be patriotic, are not prepared to recommend such extreme devotion to the interests of posterity.

The second section of the bill, inter alia, requires the Commissioner, in case the lands examined shall be the property of corporations, to institute legal investigations and legal proceedings to determine the validity of the title by which they are held, and the result of such investigations or proceedings shall be embodied in his report. In this we are expected to have a voluminous if not a glorious combination of the law and the facts. Doubtless this would afford some amusement and profit to the lawyers who might have the good fortune to be employed, as well as provide comfortable fees to the marshals, sheriffs, and clerks. This part of the report alone would make a work of such extraordinary magnitude that human life would be too short to examine it, human patience would stand aghast at the prospect of a bare possibility of the struggle, and human endurance would die from hopeless despair.

The third section requires, in addition to all the other "facts," an embodiment in the same report of some "facts" besides, which "will encourage interstate migration," and that "good maps of the States and Territories shall accompany it," which shall "indicate the public and private lands situated therein open to purchase or settlement." The committee respectfully suggest that after an immigrant had spent a hundred or more years in reading all the facts he would hardly have life enough left to indulge in the pastime of geographical investigation. The very contemplation of this mighty work produces a complete exhaustion of physical power, and the committee, moved in part by a tender regard for the well-being of the Commissioner, earnestly invoke Congress not to put an end to his valuable existence by placing upon him a load which will crush him into atoms.

But the end is not yet; the endless catalogue of "woes unnumbered" is not exhausted. We have not completed and never can complete the "unspeakable grief." Besides all the foregoing kinds of "facts," and very many others that are not foregoing, the stalwart pack-horse of official burdens must publish a monthly report, in which he shall set forth every place within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States "where either public or private work of any extent is to be undertaken, the amount of labor required, the wages paid, the most prominent trades, and the prices of the most common articles used," &c., which must be "sent to all postmasters for distribution, and to private citizens, upon application, post free." Now, in such a dire contingency as this, what would become of the railway postal routes, to say nothing of the "star service," your committee confess, in all humility, that they are unable to see. Even courting, that delightful chitchat which tries the nerves of bashful lovers, would have to be done by telegraph, to the great joy of operators, for the mails could take nothing but Government reports.

The committee admit that they may have possibly misconstrued the objects, and especially the "other purposes," of the bill; but they have made an honest effort to comprehend them. The entire scope and purview of the bill are so large that despite all their labors a veil of mystery shrouds their magnificent proportions to such an extent that the provisions are more incomprehensible to finite minds than that part of the soliloquy of Macbeth just before the "fatal entrance of Duncan under his battlements," in which Shakspeare makes this henpecked husband say that at the "taking off" of a king who "had borne his faculties so meek and been so clear in his great office"

"Pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind;"

or even that remarkable question which puzzled the brains of a Georgia debating society: "Whether at public elections the votes of faction predominate more by internal suggestions or the bias of jurisprudence?"

But if this bill shall become a law, and in the marvelous dispensations of Divine Providence the Commissioner shall ever finish the Herculean task, when he comes to take an admiring view of the stupendous pile which his genius and patience and energy have brought together, he must be excused if, with beaming eye and swelling bosom, he exclaims, in the exuberance of his pride:

"Exegi monumentum aere perennius Regalique situ pyramidum altius."

Respectfully submitted.

WALTER L. STEELE,
For Committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I make a point of order that this should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If half the matters alluded to in this report are true, then the bill ought not to be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The bill is reported adversely, and the usual proceeding in such cases is that the bill be laid upon the table and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I know such is the usual proceeding, but there ought to be an exception in this case.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects, and moves its reference to the committee, he has that right.

Mr. CONGER. The report makes me anxious to have the matter go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for that committee certainly should consider such matters as are referred to in it.

Mr. REAGAN. Why should it go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is any member's right to move its reference to the Committee of the Whole. Bills reported adversely are constantly sent to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. REAGAN. I think we can do something else than discuss migration.

The SPEAKER. The House might be willing to reverse the adverse recommendation of the committee.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the report ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House may, and he is hereby directed to, appoint a select committee, consisting of five members of this House, to be selected from the Committee on Agriculture, to take into consideration such measures as may tend to promote the agricultural interests of the country, to investigate the system and workings of the Department of Agriculture, and report, by bill or otherwise, such additional legislation as may be deemed necessary for the promotion of the Department of Agriculture and the advancement and protection of agricultural interests. Said committee may sit during the recess, and shall have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk, stenographer, and such other persons as may be necessary to such investigation. And in order to defray the expenses of said investigation the Clerk of the House is directed to pay to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $3,000, whose receipt shall be a good and sufficient voucher to the Clerk in the settlement of his accounts. The aforesaid sum of money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be disbursed on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall make report to this House in detail of the manner in which said sum has been expended, accompanied by vouchers, which report, when examined and approved by the Committee of Accounts, shall be deemed a sufficient settlement of his accountability therefor, and any unexpended balance in his hands shall be paid by him into the Treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is paid.

Mr. CONGER. Does that make an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. If it does make an appropriation it goes to the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair has stated it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been advised the money is to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CONGER. If it comes out of the contingent fund of the House it requires an appropriation.

Mr. LE FEVRE. The money has already been appropriated to the contingent fund.

The SPEAKER. It has never been held to be subject to the rule requiring subject-matters to be referred to the Committee of the Whole. The practice of the House is to the contrary where the money is to be paid out of the contingent fund or from money already appropriated.

Mr. CONGER. Then I should like to move an amendment to the resolution. I do not see why we should not allow this investigation to be made under the Committee on Agriculture instead of making a special committee. I think we have already special committees enough.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under the resolution the Committee on Agriculture is to have this power.

Mr. CONGER. But the resolution gives additional power to send for persons and papers, to which I see no objection, but I see no necessity for a special committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan suggests that instead of a select committee the matter be referred to the entire Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; the investigation shall take place by the standing Committee on Agriculture, instead of making, as the resolution proposes, a special committee.

Mr. LE FEVRE. The resolution merely proposes a selection by the Speaker from the Committee on Agriculture for the puposes for this investigation. But I have no objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, that modification will be made. The resolution is before the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not understand the agreement.

The SPEAKER. The modification of the resolution is to the effect that the investigation shall be made by the Committee on Agriculture instead of providing for a special committee for that purpose.

Mr. DUNNELL. But the phraseology of the resolution must be very much changed in order to confer on the Committee on Agriculture what is proposed to be done in the resolution. A new resolution ought to be introduced rather than the adoption of the pending resolution with the amendments suggested.

Mr. BUCKNER. It seems to me this work cannot be done except during the vacation of Congress, as I understand it, and this special committee is to be organized for the purpose of going through the country taking testimony and making the investigation suggested.

Mr. LE FEVRE. There is nothing in the report indicating anything of the kind. It is proposed that this committee shall look into the system and working of the Department of Agriculture and to report by bill or otherwise such legislation as may be deemed best for the advancement and promotion of agriculture.

Mr. BUCKNER. But the resolution provides for sitting during the recess.

Mr. LE FEVRE. The bill was offered at the beginning of the last session and was sent to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DUNNELL. It provides also the committee shall have power to send for persons and papers. I am willing this power should be conferred on the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BUCKNER. It seems to me this power now belongs to the Committee on Agriculture when in session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota suggests the words "to sit during recess" be stricken out.

Mr. LE FEVRE. That is proper. As I have said, the resolution was introduced during the extra session and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that amendment. If it is necessary that the committee should sit during the recess it can come in at the end of this session and ask for that power.

Mr. AIKEN rose.

Mr. LE FEVRE. Have I the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to offer the following amendment:

Add to the resolution these words:

And to consider the propriety of consolidating or reorganizing the public gardens or conservatories of this city, or their total abolition.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I now demand a vote on the resolution.

Mr. AIKEN. In this section of the Hall, owing to the confusion, we have been unable to hear what is the question before the House, or the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio. I simply desire to know whether the resolution has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio or whether it is a report from the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. It is a report from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Chair please have the resolution again read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, as amended, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be authorized to take into consideration such measures as may tend to promote the agricultural interests of the country, to investigate the system and workings of the Department of Agricultnre, and to consider the propriety of consolidating or reorganizing the public gardens or conservatories of this city or their total abolition, and report by bill or otherwise such additional legislation as may be deemed necessary for the promotion of the Department of Agriculture and the advancement and protection of agricultural interests. Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk, stenographer, and such other persons as may be necessary to such investigation. And in order to defray the expenses of said investigation the Clerk of the House is directed to pay to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $3,000, whose receipt shall be a good and sufficient voucher to the Clerk in the settlement of his account. The aforesaid sum of money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be disbursed on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall make report to this House in detail of the manner in which said sum has been expended, accompanied by vouchers, which report when examined and approved by the Committee of Accounts shall be deemed asufficient settlement of his accountability therefor, and any unexpended balance in his hands shall be paid by him into the Treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is paid.

Mr. LE FEVRE. Mr. Speaker, in presenting this resolution I have in view but one object, and that is of great importance and vast proportions. I have frequently seen it stated, and without investigating the matter myself I am inclined to accept the statement as true, that one-half the people of this country is either directly engaged in agricultural pursuits, or in business closely allied and dependent in a measure upon the labors and productions of the farmer. This being true, it would seem that the legislation of this country has been sadly at fault, as but little if any national legislation has ever been enacted for the protection of the farmer and the advancement of the great interests which he alone represents. All other interests are amply guarded and fostered, but this one of agriculture seems to have been left to take care of itself. And to a great extent it has taken care of itself. Where else on the broad face of the earth has any country taken such rapid strides forward? In what other country has the forests been subdued and the waste places been made to bloom as in our own? With all the fostering care of the monarchies of the Old World for those engaged in agricultural pursuits, our hardy yeomen have outstripped them in everything—in the reclamation of lands, in the invention of labor-saving machinery, in the production of the soil; and this, allow me to say, without any protection from the General Government; in other words, our farmers have advanced and prospered in spite of our neglect. How much more rapidly might they have advanced had we extended to them the same encouragement, the same protection, and the same fostering care as that enjoyed by those engaged in a like calling in the older countries of the world?

Notwithstanding recent depression in business, the area devoted to agricultural cultivation and use is every year extending and expanding. Of the cereals and all those staples of the garden and the farm necessary for the sustenance of our people the increase during the past few years has been wonderful; so great, indeed, that the production is almost beyond calculation. The following brief table fully illustrates the extent and importance of the cereal crops of the country; they are given but for two years, but this is sufficient to illustrate the great yearly increase both in the amount of land cultivated and the productions:

Total number of acres and bushels of the cereal crops of the United States.

Products.	1877.		1878.
	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.
Indian corn	50, 369, 113	1, 342, 538, 000	51, 008, 000	1, 371, 000, 000
Wheat	26, 277, 546	364, 194, 146	32, 208, 000	422, 000, 000
Rye	1, 412, 902	21, 170, 100	1, 621, 000	25, 800, 000
Oats	12, 826, 148	406, 394, 000	13, 176, 000	411, 855, 000
Barley	1, 614, 654	34, 441, 400	1, 790, 000	42, 000, 000
Buckwheat	649, 923	10, 177, 000	673, 000	12, 247, 000
Total	93, 150, 286	2, 178, 934, 646	100, 476, 000	2, 284, 902, 000

Think of the vast interests affected by these productions! Not only our own country is abundantly supplied but our surplus is almost large enough to supply all Europe. In these productions the laboring-man is given employment; in their preparation for market the mechanic finds ready work at remunerative wages; but the middleman, the merchant, the railroads, and the speculators get the profits. Take, for instance, the history of the transportation of wheat from the West to the Atlantic seaboard for last year and the present season. The transportation of wheat from the West last year to the cities of the eastern seaboard was less than six cents per bushel, while this year it has been advanced more than double that amount. And mark you this action of the railroads has been taken when there was an enormous crop to be transported against a limited one last year. This crop had to be removed; the railroad corporations understood this, took advantage of the situation, raised their prices to more than double former rates, and thereby imposed a heavy and outrageous tax upon the farmer. The distance to market was no greater this year than last, but the crop was larger and must be marketed. This the railroad companies knew, hence this extortionate tax upon the producer. Herein is where the farmer and the laboring-man need protection—protection against the combinations which capital alone can make. And this, Mr. Speaker, is one of the principal points to be investigated by this proposed committee.

It is hardly worth while for me to dwell on this subject. Our country is of vast extent, and our climate and soil is capable of producing everything necessary for the comfort and well-being of our people in the greatest abundance. We raise many things in limited quantities which we can raise in greater abundance. We import vast quantities of sugar, for the payment of which we export vast sums of gold. We can do better than this; we can raise our own sugar and keep our gold at home. How and where? Let this committee investigate and determine, and present such protective measures as may be necessary. The production of sugar in unlimited quantities will soon follow. So with everything except those articles which can only be produced in the tropics, and they are principally luxuries which we can do without.

There is no interest of greater importance to us as a people than that of agriculture, nor any for the advancement of which Congress can afford to legislate more freely or more liberally. The improvement of the methods of practical agriculture by the application of scientific knowledge is of great importance. It is our duty as legislators to provide means liberally for the investigation of subjects of such interest as individual enterprise cannot reach. In this connection permit me to refer to our live-stock interests.

In 1875 we had in the United States (estimated) 11,149,800 horses and mules, 27,870,700 head of cattle, 35,935,300 head of sheep, and 25,726,800 head of swine. In 1877 Great Britain and Ireland had but 6,115,491 cattle, 30,000,000 sheep, and 2,422,832 head of hogs. It will be seen from these figures how much greater our interests in live stock are than those of the people of Great Britain, and yet that government has a most stringent law for the protection of its domesticated animals from the spread and ravages of contagious and infectious diseases. Our interests are greater than they were in 1875, but if there has been no increase in the numbers of farm animals we have to-day at least 100,000,000 head of the four principal classes of farm stock named above. If we average these at the low sum of $3 per head we have a money value of $300,000,000. These animals are all subject to deadly contagious and infectious diseases, and unless some general protective law can be passed the increase of loss to the farming community must be at an alarming ratio with each recurring year. An eminent veterinarian, in summing up the losses occasioned by the ravages of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle in Europe, says that England imported lung fever of cattle in 1842, just one year before it was brought to the United States, where it has continued up to the present time. Up to 1869 it is estimated that Great Britain had lost, almost exclusively from this disease, 5,549,780 head of cattle, worth £83,616,854, or, say, $400,000,000. For the succeeding nine years, up to 1878, the losses have been equally as heavy, making a total loss of perhaps $500,000,000 in deaths alone, without counting the contingent expenses of deteriorated health, loss of markets, progeny, crops, disinfection, quarantine, &c. And yet England has a contagious-disease (animals) act. What might have been the losses from this one isolated disease had it not been surrounded with all the safeguards of a law drawn with the greatest care and carried out with the strictest fidelity?

About twenty-five years ago a disease made its appearance among hogs in some of the great hog-growing States of the West. It attracted but little attention at first, but as it continued to spread from one State to another, and seemed to become more fatal with every recurring year, farmers and stock-growers, and occasionally a physician and surgeon, would devote a little attention to a cursory investigation of the malady, but no definite results were obtained until very recently—not until Congress made an appropriation to commence and carry forward an investigation which should result in revealing the true nature and cause of this disease. The investigation has not yet been completed, but the infectious and contagious character of swine plague has been determined beyond question. For several years past the losses from this disease have been estimated at from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 per annum. The disease has prevailed in this country for near a quarter of a century, and if we place the annual losses during the past decade at $15,000,000 per annum, we have a total loss, sustained principally by the farmers of the country, of $150,000,000. For the other fifteen years of the comparative infancy of the disease the losses no doubt amounted to as much more, making the total loss from this one disease of $300,000,000. Already several European governments have prohibited the importation of our smoked meats because of the prevalence of this disease among swine, and in all probability others will soon follow. Here, then, is another disease of a purely contagious character, which it seems is even more destructive than that of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle. What can we do to protect the farmers of the country against the ravages of these destructive diseases? They must be eradicated in some way, or else our great stock interests will speedily be destroyed. No individual enterprise or combination of farmers can make headway against such epidemics as these. It is only through a combination of all the people, aided by a stringent law, that any good can be effected. Money will be required, which Congress should grant willingly. But in making such appropriations we must see that its disbursement is put in the hands of proper persons. We might appropriate millions here, and unless the appropriations are properly guarded they might be foolishly and lavishly frittered away without the accomplishment of any good whatever. And this brings me to the consideration of the last clause of the resolution which I have submitted for the consideration of this House.

Without intending any disrespect, or knowing the reasons therefor, I state a fact when I say that there seems to be a want of confidence existing between the members of this House and the head of the Department of Agriculture. Whether the fault lies with the Commissioner of Agriculture or with my colleagues on this floor is a matter of which I am ignorant; but let the fault rest where it may, it is a fact patent to a large majority of the members of this House. I therefore state only what is generally known when I give expression to this fact, and, without inquiring into any of the reasons underlying this misunderstanding, I say it is due to the Commissioner of Agriculture as well as to myself and my colleagues on this floor that an investigation of the system and working of the Department over which he presides should be had. So far as I know to the contrary, the Commissioner of Agriculture is active and efficient in the discharge of his duties, and guards carefully the interests of the Government. Some months ago I had business transactions with him myself, and in this case I thought he was overzealous in protecting the interests of the Government at my expense. This transaction, however, has had no influence in the introduction of this resolution. I introduce it solely in behalf of the great interests of agriculture, which can be greatly subserved by bringing that Department in harmony with the legislative branch of the Government. If there is anything wrong with the system under which the Department is being conducted, let us know it that we may be able to intelligently apply a remedy. If further legislation is necessary to give dignity and add confidence to the Department, let us know that. I am satisfied that this Department, if properly managed and properly aided, can be of immense advantage to the agricultural interests of the country, and for one I am ready to vote it all the aid, materially and otherwise, that is necessary to bring it up to the highest standard of usefulness.

Mr. AIKEN. Is that report open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is, if the previous question is not sustained. The previous question, if sustained, shuts off amendments under the rule.

Mr. AIKEN. I hope the previous question will not be sustained.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 62, noes 34.

So (further count not being insisted on) the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 22, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the other side be counted.

The other side was counted; and there were noes 100.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 19 voting therefor, not one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Upon that I ask for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 77, noes 26.

So (further count not being called for) the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LE FEVRE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UTE INDIAN RESERVATION IN COLORADO.

Mr. SCALES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 142) to create a commission to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the extinguishment of their title to the Ute reservation, and as a substitute therefor the Senate joint resolution (S. R. No. 51) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado and their removal and settlement elsewhere, with an amendment thereto.

The amendment was read.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the joint resolution requires an appropriation and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCALES. That is true; but I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not insist upon that point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I think the resolution itself is so faulty that it should not be passed in its present shape.

Mr. SCALES. I trust the gentleman will allow the House to consider the joint resolution. It is of great importance and is so judged by the Department. Before the Chair rules on the point of order I desire to be heard for a few moments.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that if the point of order be reserved.

The SPEAKER. All the gentleman's rights will be reserved.

Mr. SCALES. A short time ago we were on the eve of a very bloody war in the Ute Territory. By the prompt action of the Secretary of the Interior a temporary peace has been brought about. This is for the purpose of securing that peace and making it permanent. It proposes the removal of these Ute Indians only with their own consent—that consent which the treaty requires. We follow the treaty strictly. It is proposed that we should thus get those Indians out of the way of the miners. There never can be anything like permanent peace in that country until this is done. Representatives of those Indians are now on their way to this capital, and the Secretary of the Interior simply asks that he may have a commission appointed or may be authorized himself to negotiate a peace on terms which look to permanency with this tribe when they shall come here.

And I will say for the information of the House that this is not at all final. It is all subject to the approbation of the House, when the Secretary of the Interior shall hereafter make his report as to what he has done. There is nothing in the joint resolution, it seems to me, to which any gentleman can object. It simply gives the Secretary power to avert a cruel and bloody war which has already been commenced. I do hope that objection will not be made, but that the House will consider the joint resolution now, and will allow the Secretary of the Interior to do this. And if it shall be found that anything wrong has been done to the Indian, or that any money has been improperly appropriated, the House will then have its remedy by approval or disapproval.

Mr. SAMFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman how it is that this cannot be done without an appropriation?

Mr. SCALES. Because if you have a commission you have to pay them.

Mr. CONGER. While the point of order is pending I cannot discuss this bill. I will only say that on its face it is absurd. It provides that the House shall confer the treaty-making power of this nation, by a special act requiring a treaty to be negotiated, on an officer of the Government not recognized by the Constitution or by the laws as having any authority to make treaties; and then it provides that a treaty thus irregularly made by an unauthorized power shall not be a treaty unless confirmed by the House of Representatives, which under the Constitution has nothing to do with the confirmation of treaties in any manner whatever.

There is another point about it. This bill provides that the consent to be obtained shall be given only for those Indians of the tribe who are not connected with warlike operations, and the decision of that point is left to whoever it may be. Now, there may be two Indians or ten Indians come here and assert that they are the only Indians of the tribe who are friendly; and their assent to any proposition of this kind will violate and destroy the solemn obligation heretofore given by the United States that these Indians shall have their reservation forever.

Sir, we know how the Indians have been driven from their reservations; how the pledges of the United States have been and are violated from day to day and from year to year. The world knows that these violations of the treaty obligations of the United States have led to more wars and more massacres and murders than anything else, and those violations have been committed for the purpose of getting from the Indians lands which are desired by the whites.

For fifty years in British North America, where there are Indians of all classes and grades, there has never been an Indian war. Why? Because the British government has dealt justly with the Indians in all that stretch of territory from Labrador to the Pacific Ocean. There never has been a war there among the Indians because the government has adhered to its promises to the Indians and has protected them in their reservations.

In our country a frontier war with the Indians is got up by a few men, and then a petition is presented to Congress to take from the Indians their lands and to fix the conditions upon which those lands shall be taken, so that the rights of the Indians shall in no manner be protected.

I object to this whole system of wholesale plunder of the Indians. I am not one of those who believe that the best Indian is a dead Indian. I am not one of those who believe that it conduces to the honor of the Government or the peace of the United States to violate every obligation that we may make with the Indians within our borders.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask consent of the House to submit a few remarks at this time in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] This is a matter in which my State is deeply interested.

Mr. BLOUNT. It will come up to-morrow in the morning hour.

Mr. SCALES. If this joint resolution is to be passed at all before the holidays it must pass to-day. I have waited until to-day for the purpose of obtaining an opportunity to report this bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs in my own right, and not be required to ask the unanimous consent of the House to report it. There is nothing in the joint resolution to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] or any other man can object, I do not care what his love for the Indian may be. I hope the House will give its consent to consider this joint resolution at this time.

The head of one of the great Departments of this Government considers this a matter of very great importance, and I hope the House will pay that much respect to him as to pass this joint resolution, so as to give him an opportunity to settle this question of peace or war with the Indians. I hope the House will give unanimous consent that the consideration of this subject may be continued now until disposed of.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no use in our continuing the debate upon this subject, with the point of order pending made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. SCALES. Then I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the discussion being continued, but I reserve my right to insist upon the point of order if I shall choose to do so.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I object to further debate upon it while the point of order is pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not see the necessity for any further debate. I think we should act upon this joint resolution at once. It is, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] has said, a matter of such supreme moment that we should not delay action upon it until after the holidays. Now is the time to give this matter definite and final consideration. I hope, therefore, that unanimous consent will be given to consider this joint resolution in the House at this time.

Gentlemen who live in the Eastern States of this country can have no idea of the anxiety and distress of mind to which the people of the Western States are subjected on account of threatened Indian hostilities. Every measure that will tend to settle these troubles should receive the immediate consideration of the House. I hope the House will consider this proposition on its merits at this time.

Mr. CONGER. On that point let me say this: let the majority of this House provide a sufficient force in our Army to protect the frontier settlements. Let them bring in a bill of that kind, and we can pass it to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Army is ample now for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON. The necessity is providing officers who in good faith will carry out the treaties of the Government.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CONGER. I do.

The SPEAKER. Then the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SCALES. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the joint resolution just referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, but it is for the committee itself to determine what business they will proceed to consider.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole,

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing payment of the salaries of the employés of Congress on the 19th of December, 1879.

Resolved, That the sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce to whom has been referred the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted on the 4th instant on the subject of the commercial relations of the country, and who are authorized to inquire by what means our foreign trade may be best promoted and foreign markets opened to American products and manufactures, have leave to sit at such times and places as shall seem to them expedient during the recess of Congress, to administer oaths and take testimony, to employ a clerk and stenographer at a fair compensation; and for the purposes aforesaid the sum of $2,500 be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, for the use of said committee, on the requisition of the chairman, whose receipt shall be a good and sufficient voucher therefor.

Mr. SCALES. I move that this resolution be laid aside.

Mr. ACKLEN. I trust that the committee will not decide to lay this resolution aside. On the 4th of last June this House adopted a resolution authorizing a sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce to make an inquiry into the commercial relations of this country——

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. SCALES. I insist on my motion.

Mr. ACKLEN. It is for the committee to decide whether they will pass this over.

Mr. SCALES. It is; but debate is not in order.

Mr. ACKLEN. A single objection to laying a subject aside necessitates a vote of the committee on its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the rule which governs the Committee of the Whole in this proceeding.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill a majority of the committee shall decide without debate whether it shall be taken up and disposed of or laid aside.

The motion of Mr. SCALES to lay the resolution aside was agreed to.

Mr. SCALES. I move that this resolution be laid aside.

Mr. ACKLEN. I object. I would like a vote of the Committee of the Whole on the question.

Mr. SCALES. I insist that debate is not in order.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman permit the reading of a report in this case?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be in the nature of debate.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UTE INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. No. 51) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado, and their removal and settlement elsewhere.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through a commission of five persons to be appointed by the President, or by direct negotiation, as he may deem best, to enter into an agreement with such of the Ute Indians in Colorado as have not, by acts of hostility against the United States or otherwise, forfeited their rights under existing treaties, for the extinguishment of their title to their reservation in said State, and to obtain their consent to their removal and settlement in the Indian Territory or elsewhere. And the said Secretary of the Interior shall report his proceedings under this resolution to Congress for its consideration and approval. The expense of such negotiation to be paid by the United States, for which purpose the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 9 to 12 the following words: "Their reservation in said State and for their removal and settlement in some suitable place not in the Indian Territory," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

So much of their reservation in said State as may be deemed desirable or necessary in the judgment of said commission or Secretary of the Interior, and for their removal and settlement in some other suitable place in the State of Colorado: Provided, That said commission or Secretary of the Interior, in any agreement made with said tribe of Utes for the cession of any part of their reservation in Colorado, shall obtain, before said cession shall be valid, the consent of said Ute tribe of Indians, as provided in section 16 of the treaty made at the city of Washington on the 2d day of March, 1868, between the Government of the United States and said tribe of Ute Indians: And provided, That no agreement made with said tribe of Indians shall be valid unless agreed to by three-fourths of all the adult male Indians who have not forfeited their rights as aforesaid, occupying or interested in the same: And provided, That Congress shall confirm said cession.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to cut off debate; but I take it for granted that everybody understands this question. Therefore, if it be agreeable to the committee, I will ask that general debate be closed, by unanimous consent, in twenty minutes. It can then run on under the five-minute rule if gentlemen think proper; but I ask now unanimous consent that general debate be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. CONGER. Let the debate run on awhile to see whether it is likely to be prolonged.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent in committee to close the debate in twenty minutes.

Mr. HOOKER. It cannot be done in committee.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Many of the members desire to discuss this bill, and I doubt whether twenty minutes will suffice.

Mr. SCALES. What longer time, then, does the gentleman mention?

Mr. BRIGHT. The committee has not power to fix the time for closing debate. The debate can run on until the committee rises.

Mr. SCALES. I move the committee rise, then, for the purpose of fixing the time for closing debate.

Mr. CONGER. I doubt whether you will get in committee again if you rise now. The gentleman had better go on discussing the bill.

Mr. SCALES. I will go on with it for the present, and I give notice that if I find the debate continues too long, I shall then move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing it. I yield, in the first place, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] for ten minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, there is no proposition more easily demonstrated than this, "The Utes must go." The time has arrived in the progress of this country when civilization has reached the very border of the Ute reservation. A large and populous settlement of industrious and hardy pioneers has already reached the reservation line, and such is the disposition of the white people on the line of that reservation, and such are the probabilities of frequent crossing by Indians and whites of the imaginary line dividing them, that all efforts to preserve peace on that border will prove futile in the future unless the Indians are removed.

We must meet this question now as legislators—meet it squarely and candidly, dealing justly with the Indians as well as the whites, having in view the imperative necessities of the case.

It will not do for gentlemen to say that the Government of the United States desires to drive these Indians step by step from the reservations until they are driven off the continent. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] a few moments ago said that we were driving the Indians from one reservation to another with a view to their final expulsion from the country. He does not seem to remember that the State which he has now the honor in part to represent was, but a few short years ago, in the possession of the Indians; and he seems to have forgotten how his constituents came into the possession of it; how the State of Michigan became a State of this Union, represented by members upon this floor, freed from the presence of Indians. He does not state those facts. I might go over the history of the country from the time of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, and the Cavaliers at Jamestown, and follow their tread over the continent, and the history is the same from that time to the present.

The Indian has been all the time going westward; he must continue to go; he must be civilized or give way to civilization. There cannot exist on the continent at the same time and in the same place civilization and barbarism. "Westward the course of empire takes its way;" its march is as irresistible as that of Sherman's to the sea. No Indian treaties, no Interior Department regulations, no Indian Bureau contrivances can stop the onward flow of white emigration or prevent Anglo-Saxon civilization from occupying every foot of land on the continent. Do what we may, enact whatever laws the wisdom of Congress may devise, organize peace commissions as numerous as the tribes of Indians themselves, indulge in sentimental speeches and overflow with sympathetic tears over the wrongs of the poor Indian as much as we may, yet the intrepid march of the white pioneer will gradually settle down upon every acre of the public domain, and the savage Indian must go. There is an irrepressible conflict between civilization and barbarism; the result of this conflict is written upon every page of our country's history. Civilization has triumphed; it will continue to triumph; barbarism must give way. Our progress is irresistible; such is the lesson of the past; as legislators we must recognize it and act accordingly. Expressions of sympathy for "Lo, the poor Indian," will not solve the difficulties of the situation.

We must provide by suitable legislation for having these Indians removed in such a manner as will as far as possible conserve the public good and do justice to them. I do not believe in treating with Indians on the ground that they are our equals. That time has passed; it is a fruitless policy. It has been demonstrated all through the history of the country that treaty negotiations with the Indians have resulted in cheating them. Therefore I propose a different policy in regard to them. It is the policy of regarding the whole of the land within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States as public domain, and treating the Indians as they are defined to be under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, as citizens of the United States. And, sir, as citizens they must be taught to obey the law. They must understand that when they kill innocent people they are guilty of murder and must suffer the consequences. Ever since the history of Indian warfare began down to the present time there has not been a more cruel, a more wanton, or a more unprovoked massacre than that which recently occurred at the Milk River agency, when the Meekers and others were slaughtered in cold blood by Ute savages. And after our Army had gone there, having nothing but peaceable motives toward law-abiding Utes, they were set upon by the Indians in ambush and many of our bravest officers and soldiers were killed with an utter disregard of civilized warfare. Yet there are Representatives in Congress who say we must protect these Indians while they are killing and murdering our people on the frontier and attacking our Army at every opportunity.

To show you, Mr. Chairman, we should not treat with these Indians as equals, I ask that an extract from the proceedings of the recent conference held at Los Pinos, as published by the Associated Press on the 9th instant, may be read for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Saturday, at noon, the Utes came into the agency and took seats inside the agency building. Jack, Colorow, and twelve other White River Utes, and of course Ouray, were present. When the Indians and the commissioners had taken seats, General Hatch addressed the Indians, setting forth the full demands of the commissioners, their right to make the demands, and the patience already exercised with the Utes. "To-day," he said, "is your last chance. We will wait no longer. We want your final answer, and we want no evasions." The list of the Utes charged by the agency women in taking part in the massacre was then read, and the question put by General Hatch, "Will you surrender the men whose names are in this paper, to be tried, and if guilty punished, and if innocent acquitted?" The question was put twice, and, after a consultation, evasive answers were returned both times. When the question was repeated the third time, Ouray replied, without consulting the other Utes, "How do we know that these Indians you name were at White River at the time of the massacre, or, even if they were there, we do not know they were concerned in it. These women mentioned names which came first to their lips, whether they know them to have been present or not. We cannot depend on what they say." "That is what we depend on," said General Hatch.

A MENACING SCENE.

General Adams then addressed the Indians, making a speech of over an hour's duration, saying, among other things, that the commissioners did not want to punish Colorow, Jack, and others who took part in the Thornburgh fight, but the cowardly dogs who participated in the massacre of the unarmed men at the agency, closing by saying, "We want those Utes and we will have them."

The Indians held a consultation in low tones among themselves, but did not seem inclined to reply at all, when General Hatch again rose and asked if the guilty Indians were to be surrendered, saying he had made the last appeal.

No one moved or spoke for a few moments, when Colorow lighted a big pipe—the "pipe of peace." Each Indian present drew his knife and laid it on his knees, the question of peace or war being the one pending. Colorow then passed the pipe to the next man without smoking, and it went round the circle. When the circle was finished he jumped to his feet, straightened up to his full height, pulled his belt around until the knife sheath was in front, and snatching his knife out, threw it quivering and ringing upon the floor. Instantly every Indian present laid his hand upon his knife or pistol, the whites following their example. The two parties stood fronting and defying each other for some moments, each waiting for the other to make a forward move. There were but six white men in the room, while the Indians numbered twenty-five, though there were fifteen soldiers in an adjoining room.

OURAY'S CONDITION.

Finally Ouray spoke: "We cannot deliver up those Indians unless they are tried in Washington; they must not be tried in Colorado. The Colorado people are all our enemies, and to give them up to be tried in this State would be to surrender them to a mob who would hang them. We will bring those twelve men here for you to see, and then those whom you decide guilty shall be taken to Washington, and the President shall determine their guilt or innocence. Douglass will have to go; we know he was in the White River troubles, and you shall decide who else. Upon this condition and no other will we surrender the twelve men."

The chief spoke with great arrogance and boldness.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, our Government now numbers forty millions of people. We have twice whipped Great Britain, once Mexico, and recently put down a rebellion which called a million of men on either side into the field at one time. Is it not humiliating to Anglo-Saxon blood to witness the spectacle which is described in the paper which the Clerk has just read? A few half-savages, representing tribes numbering but about three thousand all told, insulting the representatives of a great government like ours! And we must submit. We must accede to their demands. We must allow them to flourish their knives and pistols, and threaten the lives of our commissioners, who were merely demanding the surrender of those guilty of murder. I am tired of trifling with the Indians. The whole policy of making treaties with them is wrong. They are citizens of the United States, and must be treated as other citizens. I would deal justly with them; but the law-making power must be the judge of what is just to them. I would advise measures of kindness coupled with firmness. Let us teach them agriculture and the useful arts; allow them to locate homesteads upon the public domain, the same as white people; and teach them, above all things, that they must work or starve.

What was the cause of the recent massacre of the Meekers and agency employés at White River agency? The sum of poor Meeker's offending was the bringing of agricultural implements into the reservation, and the plowing up of the ground in the vicinity of the agency buildings. This gave mortal offense to the poor Indian, and he resorted to his old and usual remedy of murder and the torch. The soldiers were ambushed and cruelly slaughtered. Can a great Government like this submit to such outrages upon its citizens and soldiery? The Utes have violated the provisions of the treaty; we are no longer bound to observe it. But let us do better than that. Let us cease making treaties to be violated as often as made, and proceed to legislate in the interest of white men as well as Indians, and do justice to both.

It is impossible, Mr. Chairman, longer to keep the peace on the border of the Ute reservation. The east line is merely an imaginary one. The Utes do not care to observe it, and the whites, impelled by rumors of rich mines within the reservation, cannot longer be restrained from crossing over and taking their chances of danger. The Utes never use the pick or the shovel. They have no use for implements of manual labor. They prefer the chase. If any work is to be done, the squaws must do it. The red lords of the tribe are too lazy to work themselves, and will not allow white men to dig for gold or silver on their reservations.

The Ute reservation is as large as the State of Indiana. There are only about three thousand Indians in all, and each family has on an average about twenty-five thousand acres of land. In addition to this princely estate, we pay the Ute tribes annually about $78,000 in clothing, provisions, and money. We furnish these Indians an immense domain for a hunting-ground; we deal them out food and clothing, and try to teach them agriculture and peaceful arts; we send agents to pay them their annuities and deal out their rations and supplies. Our agents are murdered. Our agricultural implements are burned, and our Army attacked and our peace commissioners insulted and defied; yet there are newspapers and members of Congress who plead for the Ute Indians as if they were the most outrageously treated beings in the world.

The Utes have no just cause of complaint against the whites or the Government. They have been treated like lords and princes, and fed and clothed at the expense of the Government, and our kindness has been met with outrages and our bounty returned with murder of our agents and the slaughter of our soldiers. Let us now remove them from their present reservation. A suitable reservation can be found elsewhere, large enough for their wants and out of the reach of white settlements. In making provision for their removal I would consult their interests and not their votes. The Representatives of the people of the United States are capable of doing justice to the Utes, without asking them whether they will obey the laws we make or not. They must obey as other citizens do, and we must deal fairly with them as we do with other citizens. We do not ask the colored people or white people or naturalized citizens what kind of laws they would like to have. We should pass just laws for all, without regard to race, color, or previous condition.

I am opposed, therefore, to the House committee's amendment to the Senate resolution. While I am opposed on principle to treating with any Indian tribes, for the reason that they are citizens and must be dealt with as such, yet I will favor the Senate resolution, in order that every effort on our part may be made to secure the peaceful removal of the Utes from their present reservation. They must go, sooner or later. If we provide for their removal now we may avert an Indian war and save the lives of many of both races. Their removal is only a question of time. They cannot exist with civilization crowding their borders and breaking over their lines. Following the fate of all their race who have refused to become civilized, they must go. It is to their interest to go. It is manifest destiny that they should go. Let us, then, provide that their going be peaceful, and make as liberal a provision for them in the future as justice and humanity could possibly require.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate was received by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announcing the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881. It further announced the adoption of a resolution that the Committees on Agriculture of the respective Houses be, and they are hereby, instructed to consider generally the subject of agriculture and report by bill or otherwise; in which concurrence was requested.

UTE INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES. I now yield for ten minutes to the Representative from Colorado.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope this House will give me its attention, in order that I may present some facts in connection with this question. The Ute reservation in the State of Colorado embraces twelve million acres of ground, an area of country equal, I believe, to the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Vermont. That vast extent of country is occupied by three thousand Utes, giving to each man, woman, and child of the Ute tribe four thousand acres of land. The resolutions sent down from the Senate provided that a commission composed of five persons should be appointed to negotiate with the Ute tribe of Indians for their removal from the State of Colorado and their settlement elsewhere, but prohibiting their transfer to the Indian Territory. The Committee on Indian Affairs in the House have recommended an amendment to the effect that the commission shall be authorized to negotiate with the Utes for a reduction of this vast extent of territory, but that the negotiation shall not include the transfer of the Utes to the Uintah reservation, or the Territory of New Mexico.

I, for one, am opposed to the House amendment for the reason I believe if these Indians are continued in the State of Colorado that next year will witness a renewal of the conflict that has attracted the attention of the country during the past few months. I desire to say now to the gentleman from Michigan that he cannot point his finger to one single complaint ever made by a single Indian in the State of Colorado against the treatment he received at the hands of the citizens of that State. I challenge him or any other gentleman on this floor, I challenge any officer of the Interior Department to produce a single complaint ever filed by the Ute Indians against the citizens of Colorado. The only complaint they ever made was this, that Father Meeker attempted to educate them in the art of agriculture; that he plowed two acres and a half of ground out of twelve million acres, and for that reason they killed him. And that is the only ground of complaint that has been urged by the Indians. It was the only ground urged by the Indian council in their conference with the governor of the State of Colorado.

It seems to me that the House should adopt the original Senate resolution, that this commission should be allowed to negotiate with the Ute Indians for their transfer to the Uintah reservation or to the Territory of New Mexico. If they are sent to the Uintah reservation every man, woman, and child in the Ute tribe will or can receive seventy-six acres of first-class arable land. In addition to this they can receive four hundred and seventy-six acres of the best pastoral land in that country. And I have no doubt that if the question was submitted to the Ute tribe to-day they would consent to their removal from the State of Colorado to the Uintah reservation. If this House, however, declares this vast reservation, embracing twelve million acres of ground, shall not be reduced, then as certain as God reigns above us, and we should not ignore the fact, next spring the teeming thousands who will pour into Colorado across the line of this reservation will prospect those mountains for rich mineral wealth, and this Government, in my judgment, has not power to arrest the progress of that great tide. The men who have carved out the path of empire across those plains never will halt at the line of this reservation; and if the Government desires to rescue these Indians from war and to save the settlers in the State of Colorado, this House must provide some method which will contemplate and secure the removal of the Ute Indians from the State of Colorado.

When I left that State I crossed five great States in reaching the capital of our country, and I announce it to be the truth, which no man can gainsay, that every acre of land in every one of those States was stolen from the Indians; and now gentlemen stand here in the name of God and humanity and say, while our fathers robbed and plundered the Indians, we want you to belong to the goody-goody class of people in the West. [Laughter and applause.] And I say to the gentleman from Michigan that the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I think for 1878, shows that more frauds have been practiced against the Indians in the State of Michigan by citizens of that State than have been practiced in any Western State or Territory. [Laughter and applause.] And when he comes here and reads me lessons and my people lessons on this subject I simply commend to his attention the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on this subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more. I charge it to be a fact that during the last summer the Ute Indians started fires all over the State of Colorado. They burned hundreds of miles of the best timber lands in that State. They destroyed untold millions of the wealth of our people, and I say the time has come when these Indians should be treated by this Government as other Indians have been treated. If I have not forgotten the history of this country the Cherokee Indians, years ago, were forced from the State of Georgia and located in the Indian Territory. They had homes in that State; they had schoolhouses in that State; they had churches in that State; and yet they were not consulted about their removal, but were tied to the tails of horses and dragged to the Indian Territory. Take the case of the Poncas. In the face of four distinct treaties on the subject this Government undertook their removal to the Indian Territory without consulting Congress at all. And now, when we come here and say that we are willing to make a fair and honorable agreement that will effect an honorable solution of this Indian question, we are told by the Committee of the House on Indian Affairs that Congress shall not consent to a reduction of this vast reservation unless three-fourths of the Indians will consent.

Mr. SCALES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BELFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCALES. Is not that in accordance with the treaty made by this Government with those Indians?

Mr. BELFORD. I say, whether it is in accordance with the treaty or not, they have violated the treaty. Its obligations are mutual. That treaty provides that they shall remain on their reservation; and I say that during the last summer they left their reservation. They fired almost the entire State of Colorado. They have murdered thirty or forty citizens outside of the Meeker massacre.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCALES. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. I had the honor to offer the amendment to the resolution of the Senate which is embodied in the report made by the committee of the House, and I did so because I thought it was our duty in treating with these Indians to treat with them according to existing treaty stipulations. My distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in speaking upon this question has seen fit to refer to and to have read the Press Association dispatches in reference to the negotiations now going on with the Utes of the White River agency. The gentleman does not understand this bill at all. It does not apply to them. It applies to the reservation held in Southern Colorado, out of which several years ago you got quite a considerable portion of their territory. It expressly by its terms embraces alone that portion of the Ute tribe of Indians who by no hostile act have forfeited the rights to which by treaty stipulations they are entitled.

If the gentleman from Illinois means to carry into the treatment of this question with reference to all the tribes, the five semi-civilized tribes in the Indian Territory and the savage tribes of the plains, the theory which he proclaims, then it is a theory which has for its basis a robbery of the Indian of every foot of land which has been left to him by the treaties your own Government has made with him. The same policy which would prompt the gentleman from Illinois to sanction the proceeding which is now being attempted because some portion of the Ute tribe have been guilty of depredations, and therefore to deprive them all of their land, would lead him to side with the policy of those people who undertook to take possession of that territory which had been set apart for the five semi-civilized tribes, and which was forfeited last year, although the whole power of the Government had been pledged to protect these Indians in what they were entitled to under treaty stipulations. If the theory of the gentleman from Illinois is to prevail with regard to the treatment of the Indian question, then it involves the infringement of every treaty stipulation, the abrogation of every law which you have passed in order to secure these people in the little remnant of that vast territory which they have ceded to you, and which you have sold, and the money obtained for which you have placed in the Treasury of your country and hold there as an evidence of the liberality of the Indians to the Government of the United States.

But, sir, to confine myself to this resolution and the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from Colorado says that this involves the question of the extirpation of the Southern Utes of Colorado, and that there is no power in the Government to prevent it. Sir, if you take that theory to be the true one, then the gentleman from Colorado, siding with the gentleman from Illinois, proposes, in violation of the most solemn treaty stipulations, to rob these people of the territory which has been ceded to them by the Government of the United States, to rob them of rights which by most solemn treaties the Government has pledged itself to respect. I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask that there be read from the treaty made even so late as ten years ago, in 1868, with this Ute tribe of Indians, the second and sixteenth sections, that the House may understand what are the obligations of the Government of the United States to these Indians.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 2. The United States agree that the following district of country, to wit, commencing at that point on the southern boundary-line of the Territory of Colorado where the meridian of longitude 107° west from Greenwich crosses the same; running thence north with said meridian to a point fifteen miles due north of where said meridian intersects the fortieth parallel of north latitude; thence due west to the western boundary-line of said Territory; thence south with said western boundary-line of said Territory to the southern boundary-line of said Territory; thence east with said southern boundary-line to the place of beginning, shall be, and the same is hereby, set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the Indians herein named, and for such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as, from time to time, they may be willing, with the consent of the United States, to admit among them; and the United States now solemnly agree that no persons, except those herein authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employés of the Government as may be authorized to enter upon Indian reservations in discharge of duties enjoined by law, shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described in this article, except as herein otherwise provided.

ART. 16. No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians, unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 7 of this treaty.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be observed that by the second article of the treaty, which I have caused to be read for the information of this committee, that portion of territory ceded to the Indians in Southern Colorado was to be theirs forever. And they were so careful in making this treaty as to stipulate that they should not be deprived of it, as the committee will observe from the sixteenth article which has been read, except by the consent of three-fourths of the adult males of the tribe.

When they made this treaty giving concessions to the Government they believed they were getting something substantial for what they then yielded. They believed, as did the five civilized tribes when they ceded that vast empire which east of the Mississippi has formed State after State in columnal sovereignty, supporting your sovereign Union and constituting now the greatest and most powerful portion of that region of country—they believed that the Government was in earnest when it said, in the emphatic but figurative language of the then President of the United States, that that territory should be theirs "while grass grows and water flows." So the Utes thought when they ceded their territory; they believed they were making a compact with a government honest enough to do what was right. If the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the honorable gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] think that this Government is powerless to carry out this treaty, I would ask them to state why it is powerless to carry out this treaty.

Mr. BELFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes; but I will say, however, that that is a bad way to answer one.

Mr. BELFORD. I want the gentleman to point if he can to a single instance in history where any government ever allowed a race of people like these Indians to stand in the way of the development of its mineral wealth and of its citizens who desired to develop it.

Mr. HOOKER. I can only say that this Government, under treaties written on paper and signed by its authorized agents, has so stipulated with these tribes. And if they were a powerful nation, with great armies at their back, and could point their cannon at your shores and demand justice, you would not dare to take the position you now do with reference to these feeble Indian tribes.

I hold that whatever may be the power of the Government of the United States, it is at least powerful enough to do what is right, to see that justice is done, even though the people who demand it do so only in the name of law and moral right, and not because they have the physical power to compel you to carry out your treaty obligations.

I offered this amendment because I felt that now, at this time, when it is true that the Utes of White River reservation have committed depredations upon the agent and the employés of the agency, and had massacred a portion of our Army—I felt that it was an ignoble spectacle to submit my country to now, because one portion of the Ute Indians have committed depredations upon your people, and had massacred a portion of your Army—it was an ignoble spectacle for a great people to say that we will seize this occasion in order to rob the Southern Utes of their territory, when in all their history, so far as I understand it, they have never presented an instance of opposition to the people of the United States, or to the treaties which have been made between the people of the United States and themselves.

I believe that it is not proper now that the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, acting for the Government of the United States, should at this particular juncture seek to do that which only eighteen months ago was directed to be done when a commission was appointed to treat with these Southern Utes of Colorado, and when, according to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I have before me, they declined to cede a portion of their territory. Then it was never pretended that this Government ought to ask these Indians to do anything else than to make such cession as to them might seem proper to be made voluntarily, in accordance with the treaty stipulations already made.

Mr. SAMFORD. I desire to ask whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi carries out, in letter and spirit, the existing treaty?

Mr. HOOKER. It does in totidem verbis. It carries out the stipulations of the second article of the treaty, and it is more particularly designed to carry out the stipulations of the sixteenth article with reference to these people, who no doubt feel that the spirit expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] would follow them, whether they were in Colorado, or whether, according to the humanity of the gentleman from Colorado, they were removed for the time being to some new Territory, to become there in turn an obstacle in the way of civilization, and thus to be brushed away without reference to treaty stipulations and the solemn compacts and agreements of our Government.

You are temporizing with the question when you undertake this proceeding. You are doing it at a time when, in my judgment, it is not manly to do it with reference to these Southern Utes. If they have to be treated with hereafter, let them be treated with. Let them give their free assent before they are deprived of a single rood of land which by solemn treaty stipulations you have said shall be theirs, and which you have so secured to them that it cannot be yielded unless three-fourths of the adult members of the tribe agree.

One word more and I am done. It has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] that because of the value of these lands, their rising value, they must be ceded; that the tide of Anglo-Saxon civilization is sweeping over this continent, and that the Indians must yield to it as savage tribes have ever yielded. I say, Mr. Chairman, that such a proposition comes with bad grace from the Representatives of a Government which has pledged its power by solemn constitutional amendment and solemn legislative enactments that the recently emancipated people of this country belonging to the African race shall receive forever the protection of the Government in the new rights, the new duties, the new powers, with which they are invested as citizens. When you extend this protection to members of the African race, shall you say that the Indian, though he is connected with you on every page of your history, and his beautiful language has named your States, your rivers, your Territories, your towns, your hamlets, and your valleys from where the first ray of the morning sun gilds the spray of Niagara to where his last parting ray sinks into the golden gates of California, is to be robbed of what he has merely because he is weak and powerless and incapable of protecting himself? [Applause.]

Mr. SCALES. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, this debate has wandered far from the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The resolution as reported by that committee does not contemplate the abrogation of a single treaty right. It does not contemplate the removal of the Indians from their present home; it simply proposes that under existing treaty stipulations a commission may be appointed to treat with these Indians and secure their agreement—that is the language of the resolution—for a parting with such portion of their reservation as may be deemed necessary for the preservation of peace. It contemplates paying the Indians whatever their land may be worth, and relocating this tribe upon some other portion of their present reservation.

The necessity of a measure of this kind will be readily seen when I state that the city of Leadville, in Colorado, is only twenty-five miles from this Ute reservation, and at that city there is an assessed valuation of $100,000,000 of property; that in the Ute reservation a large number of miners are already prospecting, and cannot be kept out from the recesses and defiles of those mountains; that the Indians themselves in some instances have wandered off their reservations to commit outrages; that between the whites and the Indians there is to-day a war. The object of this resolution is to provide for a meeting between representatives of the Government and the Indians, to secure by peaceful negotiation their assent to such disposition of those mineral lands as shall allay the prevailing excitement, prevent war, and secure equal and exact justice to the Indians. That is all there is in this resolution. There is no chance under it to violate a single treaty stipulation; there is no chance under it to rob the Indians. It simply seeks to relocate them by their own agreement upon another portion of their reservation.

In answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] who alluded to the Southern Utes, I desire to say that this resolution takes in the whole Ute reservation and the whole Ute tribe within the State of Colorado—not only those that have been at war, but those that have been at peace. It also provides that, before any agreement is made, three-fourths of all the Indians who have a right to agree under treaty stipulations shall agree to this new treaty or agreement between the Government and the Indians.

It is utterly impossible—it has been found impossible in a dozen cases preceding this—to keep the miners of Colorado and Wyoming off these mineral lands. It has been found impossible to maintain an army there adequate for the protection either of the whites or of the Indians. We have objected to the removal of these Indians because their reservation, as now occupied, is high up in the mountains; and although from its location on the map it may seem to be in the same latitude as my State, yet its climatic conditions are those of the northern part of the United States. In a great portion of the Ute reservation you are liable to have a frost every night. To locate these Indians on any southern territory, or in any other place than their own homes, was regarded by the committee as unwise, and they provided, therefore, their reservation should be diminished and that they should be located upon a smaller portion of it. The process contemplated is the process by which every Indian reservation has been diminished since the organization of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCALES. I will now yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY.]

Mr. CONGER. How much of the hour is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for his courtesy.

Mr. SCALES. Does anybody else want the floor?

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. SCALES. I did yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio, but he has declined to take it.

Mr. FINLEY. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to make the point of order that the time for debate had expired; and I supposed, therefore, I could not go on. I was not tenacious about making a speech.

Mr. CONGER. No; I merely inquired how much time was left.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I misunderstood the gentleman entirely.

Mr. BRIGHT. After the expiration of the first hour, I presume the question will be open to general debate.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to obtain the floor when the gentleman from North Carolina concludes his hour.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to yield to me for a question.

Mr. SCALES. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Having heard this resolution, having heard the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the statement of facts by the gentleman from Kansas, I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether he does not think the Committee on Indian Affairs ought not to be censured for not having reported a resolution which would fit the speech of my friend from Mississippi. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman will make that motion, if he thinks that is the proper way to get at it.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I must say that I do not think any speech that has been delivered meets the question before the House except to a certain extent the remarks submitted by the gentleman from Kansas who has just taken his seat. I do not think that it is a subject that affects the Indians or the emigrants. I do not think that this is an occasion upon which outrages upon the Indians should be developed and elaborated, nor do I regard it as a time when we should talk about what perils and difficulties the emigrants who have gone to the West have been subjected to. That question is not now before the House. I do not propose to discuss it. At some future time and on some future occasion, Mr. Chairman, I hope to have a bill in the House upon which gentlemen will be allowed to give all their views, when the question of public policy in regard to the course to be pursued toward these Indians may arise, but until then I propose to confine myself to the resolution before the House.

Mr. Chairman, what is it—and I beg gentlemen to give me their attention for the few moments I have—what is it that is proposed by this resolution? The gentleman from Michigan objected to the resolution because it proposes to tie the hands of the treaty-making power. I want to say in answer to that objection that this is not a proposition to make a treaty. The time for making treaties with the Indians is past. That power has been repealed. Under no law now in existence in this country can we treat with any Indian tribe. But the resolution in that regard is just the resolution that came to us from the Secretary of the Interior. It is his language, sir, and they—the President and the Secretary of the Interior—do not object to it, and we adopt the exact language used by the Secretary himself. His resolution, however, comprehended all the territory in our vast domain where in his discretion he might think proper to locate these Utes. That resolution was introduced into the Senate, and that body excepted only from its comprehensiveness the Indian Territory. In that shape and condition it came back to the House. It was then referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and was considered with due regard, sir, to the rights of the Indians, and while chairman of that committee, I wish to say here and now that I shall, on all proper occasions, stand by the rights of the Indians, and endeavor to do what I can to protect what I consider a down-trodden and helpless race. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I believe there are duties we owe to our own citizens, duties to this Government, and my policy is to so harmonize them that we can develop the great interests of this Government and yet secure the Indians in all their rights and all their property. In order to secure these Indians, what does the committee do? And if any gentleman is squeamish on the subject I ask that he shall read carefully what we recommend. We recommend, and that is the amendment, that the Indians shall not go beyond the borders of Colorado. We recommend that their consent shall be taken in the very words of the treaty which they made about ten years ago; that nothing shall be done except by their free consent thus obtained. We recommend that nothing shall be done except by their free consent, and then after that is done the matter shall come before Congress for its approval or disapproval. What is there objectionable in that? Why all this talk?

Mr. TUCKER. Is that in the amendment?

Mr. SCALES. It is, sir. It is a part of the resolution. It must come back to Congress.

Mr. TUCKER. That the consent of Indians shall be had, according to the terms of the treaty?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir; according to the terms of the treaty. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] told you in so many words, it is exactly and identically the language used in the treaty with those Indians.

There is another fact I will state to the House. My friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, says he does not think this is the proper time for it. Why? Two years ago we made a treaty with these Indians, or a contract, by which they agreed of themselves to cede all this territory and to give the Secretary the right to locate them anywhere upon our domain. But now they are in difficulty with the Government; now some of them are under arrest, some of them are in duress; and so careful was this committee that they should not be imposed upon that we said not a step should be taken until three-fourths of them should consent to it and unless it should be brought back to Congress for approval.

Mr. HOOKER. Will my friend let me correct him in regard to one statement?

Mr. SCALES. We will disagree about that. I think we disagreed in the committee on that question; and I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me, because my time is very short.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all of this question. We are now to determine what we shall do. War is going on. Peace has not been settled. The Secretary of the Interior asks that he be allowed now, after there has been this interval between peace and war; now when there is a chance to settle this difficulty permanently; now when we will be able perhaps to open those mines to American emigration; now when the Indians are willing, if they are willing, to give them up and take other lands more applicable to them on account of agricultural qualities—the Secretary of the Interior, I say, asks us now that he may have the opportunity of settling this question permanently. He asks that all causes of difficulty shall be withdrawn. He asks to be allowed to do that which will protect your territory at Leadville, to protect the mines in that country not valuable to the Indians, to open up that entire country, if they consent to it. And what harm is done? Who is imposed on? Whose rights are sacrificed? Not even the feelings of the Indians, because we say, "You shall not be taken from your homes; you shall not be taken from your burial grounds; you shall still live in the country where your fathers lived; you shall still linger, if you please, around your burial grounds; you shall still be buried with the Indians of the past, if you so desire. It is for you to say. Your consent is necessary, and it cannot be done without your consent."

And it is not to be complete then, Mr. Chairman, and cannot be completed until Congress shall say it is proper and right and justice has been done to these Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SCALES. I move that the committee rise and report this bill to the House.

Mr. CONGER. I guess not.

Mr. TUCKER. Would it not be more regular to have the resolution read and acted on?

Mr. CONGER. It cannot be reported to the House while I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee should rise now the bill would be left in committee, as it has not yet been considered by sections.

Mr. SCALES. I hope by unanimous consent we will proceed under the five-minute rule to debate the proposition.

Mr. CONGER. I have the floor, and ask to be recognized in my own right to an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can only rise and report the bill to the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. SCALES. I move the committee rise, for the purpose of cutting off debate.

Mr. CONGER. I am on the floor, and the Chair recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's remedy is to vote down the motion.

Mr. CONGER. I claim the floor, having been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. SCALES. Hear me for a moment.

Mr. CONGER. Not until I am recognized and have the floor, and then I will yield for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to put the motion submitted by the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman did not have the floor to make the motion.

Mr. SCALES. I did have the floor and did not yield it.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word; and the rule forbids the reporting of a measure while an amendment is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can do that. The motion to rise is equivalent to a motion to adjourn and must be put.

Mr. CONGER. I have brought on this debate by my objection in the House. The gentleman from North Carolina has had his hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from North Carolina has had his hour and now he attempts in violation of all ordinary courtesy to cut off all debate on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit that while a motion to rise is not debatable, a motion to rise and report a bill to the House is debatable.

Mr. SCALES. That is not the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. That of course is not debatable.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. SCALES, that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate, there were—ayes 55, noes 59.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, what is there in this resolution passed by the Senate, examined by a committee of this House, and sent to the Committee of the Whole for discussion that should make the gentleman in charge of it, after having given to his friends every opportunity to defend it, refuse the same opportunity to gentlemen on the other side?

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; not now.

Mr. SCALES. I hope the gentleman will not do me injustice. I did no such thing. I gave the floor to gentlemen representing both sides.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman asked the committee to rise for the purpose of closing debate. And I venture to say he did not even know the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] would so eloquently and forcibly oppose this resolution. What is there in it which demands such secrecy, such haste, and the prevention of discussion? The gentleman may explain that when he has the floor again.

It is remarkable, sir, that the only advocates of this measure, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Colorado, the State most interested in this matter, have fortified this bill by referring to all that has occurred since the discovery of this continent that is wrong and injurious and rascally to the aborignal tribes of this country.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CONGER. Not now.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman stated I am in favor of the amendment. I am not. I am opposed to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is in favor of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I think the gentleman from Colorado also is opposed to the pending amendment.

Mr. CONGER. He is in favor of the bill. Now what kind of bill is it that requires this hasty passage, that requires the forbiddal of debate, that requires the gathering around it all the brilliant and world-renowned rascalities that have been practiced upon the Indians since the discovery of America to this date, to sanction it, to enforce it, to pass it? Sir, there are some things in the history of this country as regards the conduct of the American people toward the Indian tribes which in the view of the civilized world we palliate as best we can. We deny them as often as we may; we recur to them with regret and with shame. Yet to-day on this floor members of this House recur to them as a reason, as an inducement, as an incentive for the perpetration of an additional wrong to the Indian race.

Now, sir, what is this resolution? The gentleman who introduced it has undertaken to state what it is. What is this resolution and what does it amount to? What lies beyond it? What is concealed? This great nation had made a treaty with a mountain tribe of Indians ten or eleven years ago by which they were permitted to go far up into unknown mountains, reported to be almost uninhabitable by civilized man, and to remain there, driven up from the frontiers, driven up from their passage out upon the plains, driven away from all lands that ten or eleven years ago the avarice and greed of white men might desire. They were so driven away and allowed to live in the fastnesses of their mountain homes. To-day the enterprise and avidity of our race have discovered treasures of silver and treasures of gold in the neighborhood of these mountains. The miners are prospecting. They have actually, as is said to-day, found rich minerals within twenty-five miles of the Ute reservation. Ah, sir, sometimes in former years we have waited till our miners or our agriculturists have stepped over the lines and have found mines or have found valleys to cultivate before we undertook to drive the Indians away. But we are becoming bolder and bolder year by year. As soon as the white man comes within sight of the mountains, as soon as he comes to the foot-hills twenty-five miles off, the committee appointed to protect the Indians in their rights brings in a bill to remove the Indians from their reservation. Our people have not yet passed into the reservation; the miners have not yet gone into the mountain, they are twenty-five miles off——

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to correct him by stating that the city of Leadville is within twenty-five miles of the Ute lands; it has one hundred millions of assessed valuation, and already the mountains west of Leadville and in the reservation are filled with adventurous miners hunting new mines.

Mr. CONGER. I am glad the gentleman has made the admission, for I misunderstood him before. The treaty which has been read declares that none but Indians—friendly Indians—shall go upon that reservation. Why have miners gone upon this reservation in violation of the treaty? Why have citizens of the United States violated the treaty? Because they can make a disturbance there and because they can excite Indians to warfare there, and because it is necessary to excite the Indians to warfare in order that they may rush to this Congress to demand that the Indians be driven from their reservation. The history of the past and the history of the present run together on all fours. It is a repetition over and over again of the same treatment of the Indians.

Mr. BELFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELFORD. I say that the people of Colorado never gave these Indians any occasion whatever for the late disturbance; and I challenge the gentleman to show a single fact pointing in that direction.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Colorado said he would ask a question, but he has made an assertion which he made before. The gentleman from Kansas says that miners are already all over that reservation.

Mr. BELFORD. The gentleman is not correct in so stating.

Mr. CONGER. I thought he was not correct, but I did not dispute it myself. [Laughter.] I was feeling my way so as to draw from the representative of those hills and those mountains of Colorado a denial of the statement of the gentleman who dwells upon the plains of Kansas.

Mr. HASKELL. And I now assert what I asserted before, that miners are on this reservation to-day.

Mr. CONGER. Now whom shall we believe? [Laughter.] I do not enter into this question of veracity between these gentlemen. My friend from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] may probably be able to stand upon the plains of Kansas, and from the enormous height from which he looks may be able to see away off into the mountains of Colorado better than the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] himself, although he comes from the mountains themselves. [Continued laughter.]

I say again that if there be any trouble there it has arisen from the violation of the treaty made within the last eleven years, and the violation, too, by citizens of the United States. And it seems that the Government of the United States has taken no pains whatever to enforce that treaty and to keep out of that reservation those who have no business to go there.

Why, sir, the very battle to which allusion has been made here was caused by sending an armed force into that reservation contrary to treaty stipulations and without notice. It may be said they were sent there to preserve peace and protect our own citizens. But the necessity for that was because individuals, miners or others, went over and upon the reservation in violation of treaty stipulations. It was because of that that these troubles have arisen. And I venture to assert here in the presence of the House that a fair investigation will show that more than nineteen-twentieths of all the Indian troubles within the borders of the United States, from the commencement of this Government until now, have been occasioned by violations of treaty stipulations on the part of citizens of the United States. This is but another instance of the same kind. They come so frequently that we are accustomed to look upon them as trivial matters.

This House has already decided that they will not make treaties with the Indians; yet this bill provides for all but in name a treaty, an agreement. Now, notwithstanding what the gentleman in charge of this bill says, I assert here that the provisions of this bill are in violation of the treaty itself. The treaty says that this territory shall not be taken from these Indians under any pretense whatever, unless three-fourths of all the adult Indians in such territory shall consent thereto. Now, what does this bill say? It says that three-fourths of the Indians in such territory, meaning only that part which the Government proposes to take, and not including Indians who have no right, as the bill says, to a voice on this subject, on account of their connection with these warlike operations, shall decide this matter. The report makes more than two-thirds of the Ute Indians defenders of these warlike operations of the Utes. What does that leave? A quarter or a third at most of all the Indians interested in that territory to determine whether this territory shall be given up. That is the iniquity of this bill. It is a violation of treaty obligations. There is no force of reasoning or of explanation whatever that can take that out of this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. It is in the treaty.

Mr. CONGER. It is not in the treaty.

Mr. HASKELL. The treaty provides that if they want to cede their lands they can do so.

Mr. CONGER. I know that; but there is excluded by this bill from any voice in this matter all those Indians connected with warlike operations.

Mr. HASKELL. They are excluded by the treaty.

Mr. CONGER. They are not excluded by the treaty of 1868. I heard the articles of that treaty read a moment ago, and, so far as I remember, there is nothing of that kind in it. This bill proposes to make a different provision from the treaty provisions. I condemn this bill, because this House has no right, this Congress has no right, to resolve that we shall make an agreement in the nature of a treaty to break another treaty made with any power. I oppose this bill because its very advocates say that these Indians must be removed because they are in the way of the white men. I oppose it because it provides that these Indians shall be located in some other portion of Colorado. Where else in Colorado can they be permitted to go? Shall they go upon the agricultural lands? Shall they have their homes among the whites, where there are already great business centers? We know that cannot be done with safety. I oppose this bill because it is the duty of the United States, with the strong arm of its power, to protect the Indians in their reservations, to keep out all intruders until some provision shall be made in regard to those reservations, according to the usual forms of law.

This is not the first time that a measure of this kind has been hurried through Congress at the instigation of Senators and Representatives of a State in order to satisfy the greed and desire of those who want Indian lands. Let this matter remain until we come together again, until we can know what is right and what is just, and how this Government may honorably and fairly fulfill its treaty obligations.

Sir, if we have not now the means to protect the Indians there, let us increase our means for that purpose. I have said, and it has been said on this floor hundreds of times, that we needed an increase of the Army for the purpose of protecting our citizens and enforcing our laws, and enforcing the obligations of our treaties. Yet we send a little band of men into a mountainous region—one hundred and forty men only—among the defiles of the mountains, without any particular object in view, and with no prospect of passing through the mountains without a collision, and we leave them there to be ambushed and slaughtered.

The one redeeming circumstance connected with that massacre, as with all other massacres of our brave troops, is the desperate and heroic courage of our officers and our men—the glory that they have added to our arms in those far-off mountains where they fought and fell. Besides this there is the additional circumstance that they were rescued from peril by the intrepidity, the gallantry of colored troops of the United States.

So far as I am concerned I oppose the principle of this resolution. I oppose this mode of treating with the Indians. I oppose attacks upon their rights in any and all forms. I may say here that since the Pontiac war of 1673 there never has been an Indian war or an Indian outbreak in the State of Michigan, either under British or American rule. The Indians of Michigan have not been imposed upon and wronged even by the Government of the United States. Under the treatment they have received from our State they have all, with the exception of one or two small bands, dissolved their tribal relations and become citizens of Michigan. They are voters there. They own their lands in severalty. What the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] alludes to in this connection I know not, unless it be the fact that when it was provided by law that the Indians should have the right to select land in severalty and that the remainder of their land should be sold for their benefit, there were white men there as there are in Colorado who sought to strip the Indians by fraud and collusion of the land or of the money which they would receive for it. When that occurred, Michigan men, instead of standing up on the floor of Congress and defending this advance of rascality upon the rights of the Indians, denounced it and stopped it. The contrast is remarkable between the conduct of my colleagues from Michigan when the rights of Indians were invaded there, and that of the Representative from Colorado when it is sought to sweep a whole nation of Indians from their old reservation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GODSHALK] for five minutes, or as much longer time as he may desire.

Mr. GODSHALK. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this question has disclosed the fact that another strip of land ceded to the Indians is wanted by the people of Colorado; and, sir, they propose to take it in a very summary and unusual way. They seem to think that "might makes right." They tell us that the people of Colorado have resolved to take that land from the Indians, and that there is no power in this Government to restrain them. Whether that be so or not, (I do not believe it is so,) I ask whether that is the right way to proceed in a matter of so much importance as this? There is a better way. William Penn found it when treating with the Indians in Pennsylvania, and his wise and humane conduct toward the Indians was rewarded by long years of peace and security. There was no trouble with the Indians there, from the very fact that they were recognized as human beings, that they were treated as people who had some rights.

I object altogether to the mode of proceeding now proposed. If we are to recognize the principle that "might makes right," I object to invoking the treaty-making power of Congress to enforce such a doctrine. It is all wrong. About ten or eleven years ago we made a treaty with these Indians, ceding to them this territory which we now think of taking from them. It is now proposed, with the civilized world as lookers on, to dispossess them in this summary way—almost without consulting them. Why, sir, the treaty we then made was to last forever; it was by its terms perpetual. And now, because there is something in that country worth stealing, (to use plain language,) because the people there suppose there is great mineral wealth in the adjoining mountains, it is proposed that the representatives of a civilized and Christian nation, which we claim to be, shall proceed in this summary manner to dispossess those Indians without regard to their treaty rights. I hope the joint resolution will not pass.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, allow me to explain just a moment with reference to the provisions of the treaty. On page 984 of the revised Indian treaties, I find in the treaty with the Utes this language:

> If bad men among the Indians shall commit a wrong or depredation upon the person or property of any one, white, black, or Indian, subject to the authority of the United States and at peace therewith, the tribes herein named solemnly agree that they will, on proof made to their agent and notice to him, deliver up the wrong-doer to the United States, to be tried and punished according to its laws; and in case they willfully refuse so to do, the person injured shall be reimbursed for his loss from the annuities or other moneys due or to become due to them under this or other treaties made with the United States.

Now let me read section 2080 of the Revised Statutes:

> Whenever the tribal organization of any Indian tribe is in actual hostility to the United States, the President is authorized, by proclamation, to declare all treaties with such tribe abrogated by such tribe, if in his opinion the same can be done consistently with good faith and legal and national obligations.

Thus by our statutes it is provided that when any Indian commits a wrong against a white man or any other person subject to the authority of the United States he ceases to be under the protection of the tribe and must, upon demand, be delivered up to the United States. Then here is the further sweeping provision in the treaty that whenever this tribal organization is at war with the United States the President may, by proclamation, abrogate all treaty obligations with them. We are to-day proposing to treat with these Utes, paying full regard to existing treaty stipulations; not one line of any existing treaty is to be abrogated by the action of this commission. Yet under the treaty we have the right to demand that any Indian engaged in war upon the United States shall be delivered up to the United States authorities—shall be surrendered from the control of the tribal organization and shall be punished by the United States. More than that, whenever this tribal organization is at war with the United States, as it is to-day, the President is empowered to abrogate by proclamation existing treaties. Yet when we stand here and advocate a resolution conforming to all treaty stipulations, violating none, framed in the interest of the Utes, framed in the interest of the "poor Indians" whom the gentleman from Michigan so eloquently defends, framed for the purpose of saving their property and lives, we are charged with attempting a violation of treaty obligations, when in fact that whole tribe to-day are legally in the hands of the President of the United States to be dealt with as felons.

Mr. CONGER. That is just as much as to say, Mr. Chairman, the proposition is plain, that there is nobody there to make this agreement with, and that the whole tribal organization were in opposition to the United States.

Mr. HOOKER. That is not true in point of fact, for, sir, the Southern Utes never have been in rebellion against the authority of the United States.

Mr. CONGER. The proposition of the gentleman is that the refusal of these men to deliver up the Utes connected with the massacre makes such a state of warlike opposition to the United States as would exclude them from acceding to this agreement, and, therefore, there is nobody left perhaps but these Indians who are coming to Washington to deed away all this great reservation. The more this unfolds itself the more perfect the iniquity becomes, and the more the advocates of this measure defend it the more it seems to me apparent that there is a rascality lying hidden in its provisions and a wrong to these Ute Indians which honest men should condemn and avoid.

Mr. BELFORD. The original resolution was prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, and do you charge the Secretary of the Interior with a rascally scheme? Do you intend to impute to the Secretary of the Interior the fact that he has sent down to the Senate a rascally scheme, and asked us to indorse it?

Mr. CONGER. When the gentleman brings to me a request from the Secretary of the Interior to him to defend him then I will answer.

Mr. BELFORD. I say that the resolution was prepared in the Interior Department and sent to the Senate from that Department, and it ill becomes the gentleman to assail the republican administration publicly and to charge it with fraud. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman's statement in regard to the origin of this resolution is not more founded upon fact than some of his statements in regard to the Ute Indians and the encroachments of the whites upon them, then he must remodel it.

Mr. BELFORD. It is nevertheless the fact that this is the pet measure of Secretary Schurz. I desire to say that it came to the House and Senate in order that the Indians might have an opportunity to consent to a reduction of their reservation. But I understand the gentleman from Michigan to take the position before the House to-day that under no circumstances shall that reservation in the State of Colorado be reduced.

Mr. CONGER. Oh, no; I never took any such position.

Mr. BELFORD. That is the position the gentleman occupies.

Mr. CONGER. I take the position that we must comply with our treaty stipulations; and if you want the Indians to surrender their rights under the treaty, then let it be understood that every one of them shall have the right to pass upon this question, and if three-fourths of the adults, as provided in the treaty, desire either to remove from their reservation entirely, or to surrender a part of it and go elsewhere, then we have at least kept within treaty stipulations. But by the gentleman's own statement—and I venture to say the Secretary of the Interior never would make that proposition—by the gentleman's own statement all those who engaged in warlike operations or sanctioned them against the United States, notwithstanding the treaty, are precluded from voting on this question.

Mr. HOOKER. The treaty expressly excludes all hostile Indians and includes by express terms those who have kept peace with the Government.

Mr. CONGER. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I am not desirous of saying anything to the committee on this subject, for I have been inclined to vote for this resolution. But I dislike very much to assume in a resolution that we may pass in this Congress that title guaranteed to this tribe of Indians is forfeited by acts of hostility or otherwise, to use the exact language of the resolution itself. I do not know what act of hostility would forfeit title to lands owned by this tribe of Indians. But we assume by the form of our resolution that all those persons who have been guilty in any way of acts of hostility in any degree have forfeited all their rights and interest in these lands.

Mr. HASKELL. Why, sir, section 2080 expressly provides that if the tribal organization of the Ute Indians enters into any hostility against the authority of the United States, then the President may by proclamation abrogate all treaties. That would abrogate all rights under this treaty.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that the treaty may be abrogated under certain circumstances; but the gentleman's proposition is to stand by the treaty, and have the President of the United States stand by the treaty, but at the same time say that a certain portion of this tribe of Indians shall have no voice in executing the treaty.

Mr. HASKELL. That was clemency on the part of the committee and of the Secretary and Congress, that we should not take all the right we possessed under the law, but that we should treat these Indians more leniently and more righteously than we were by law entitled to treat them. I was simply debating a question of law raised against me. But we went on broader ground. We refused to recognize, and so did the President, that these hostile acts on the part of these Ute Indians abrogated the treaty with those Indians, and we simply declared that every Indian not in hostility to the United States shall have a chance to come in here and vote on this agreement, and that three-fourths should be secured before any transfer could be made.

Mr. KEIFER. I have been fortunate enough to stir up the gentleman a little on this subject. But I do not see his point. I fail to see it. I understand the committee to be entirely in favor of recognizing this treaty and working out some scheme by which they may have these Indians, not only those guilty of hostility toward the United States, but all the others dispossessed of their rights. That was the act of mercy and grace on the part of the committee, that they let anybody in at all to speak for this tribe of Indians; that they propose to take all their lands from them by negotiating with a few; I do not know whether they are those who could not fight or would not fight, the cowards of the tribe, or what they were, but they are the persons with whom this negotiation is to be made. They are to let such persons as may be chosen by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Interior go on and determine who they shall hear and whose vote they shall take, and who they shall consult in determining whether they will take away the title of these Indians to their reservation itself. If we can get upon any plan by which these lands may be fairly receded to the United States and this tribe of Indians removed to another place where they are willing to go, I am inclined to think that would be right.

Mr. HASKELL. I will make that point clear.

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HASKELL. Under the treaty with these Ute Indians it is provided if any one shall commit any crime he shall practically be disfranchised—cut off from the tribe, and they are to deliver him up, turn him over to the United States Government. That is in the treaty. That is the agreement. Now, I say in treating with these Indians under the treaty for their land we will treat with all those who have not by the terms of their treaty cut themselves off from their treaty rights and I say that is an act of leniency on the part of the committee, for under section 2080 of the Revised Statutes the power is lodged in the President, if he chooses to exercise it, when the tribal organization is engaged in war to abrogate the treaties with that tribe and wipe out every one of them. The committee did not desire to have the President, the Secretary, or Congress abrogate the treaty or steal the lands, but under the provisions of the treaty to agree with them about a recession of a portion of their reservation.

Mr. WILLITS. I should like to know whether——

Mr. CONGER. I will yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILLITS. I should like to know whether any facts exist in this case which would warrant the President in abrogating that treaty?

Mr. HASKELL. They do.

Mr. WILLITS. I should like to inquire whether the tribal organization of Utes have ever been at war with the Government.

Mr. HASKELL. They are now, to-day.

Mr. WILLITS. I do not understand that to be so.

Mr. HASKELL. In the last council of the Utes, the proceedings, which were read to this House to-day, showed that a declaration of war was made by Ouray, Colorow, and Jack, head chiefs of the Ute tribe.

Mr. WILLITS. Did the commissioner so understand it?

Mr. HASKELL. They flung on the floor of the council-room their knives drawn; they refused to smoke the pipe of peace in solemn council. What is that but a declaration of war?

Mr. WILLITS. Did the commissioner understand that was a declaration of war?

Mr. HASKELL. It was a declaration of war and refusal to comply with their treaty stipulations, and the council broke up.

Mr. WILLITS. It was broken up with the distinct understanding that they would obey their treaty obligations and give up the guilty men. They did everything asked of them.

Mr. HASKELL. But on condition that they should be tried outside of Colorado.

Mr. WILLITS. I understand they recognized the obligations of their treaty, and I deny there was any declaration of war.

Mr. HASKELL. And since that council they have refused to bring in the men, and there is not one of them that has been brought in.

Mr. WILLITS. That is a question of fact.

Mr. KEIFER. All this I suppose is a part of my speech.

Mr. FINLEY. It has been very well put in.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand, however, that my friend from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has made this point entirely clear. It may be to himself and to others here, but it is not so to me. I think the distinguished gentleman is very widely mistaken in undertaking to state to the House in Committee of the Whole what constitutes a declaration of war on the part of a tribe of Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. Gentlemen in the aisles will please be seated.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. I was about to say that I must take issue with the distinguished gentleman and soldier from Kansas as to what constitutes a declaration of war by a tribe of Indians.

Mr. HASKELL. I was talking about the Utes.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not propose to discuss that question, because it is not very germane to this debate; but I will say that I do not believe a few Indians throwing down their knives upon the floor, when they are disputing about certain matters, constitutes a declaration of war that has the effect to take the tribal rights——

Mr. HASKELL. That is good Ute law.

Mr. KEIFER. That has the effect to take away from them entirely the tribal rights under United States treaties. I say it is not good Ute law. But the gentleman is mistaken in the fact, because during the negotiations that were going on there was a dispute upon the question as to where these hostile Indians were to be tried; and they threw down their knives merely to indicate that they were at issue with the commissioners of the United States upon that one point; and they did not then dispute, and have not since disputed, the fact that these hostile Indians ought to be delivered up to the United States courts for trial somewhere.

Mr. HASKELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Pardon me; I should be allowed to use one-fourth of my time myself. And they are to-day sending hostile Utes to the Secretary of the Interior, to be tried, as I understand, in the city of Washington. The gentleman, then, is mistaken as to that.

Now, to come back to the question before the committee, I do not understand that we are acting faithfully when we declare that it is for these persons who may be appointed by the President of the United States to determine what Indians of this tribe have forfeited their rights under the treaty of the United States. I do not understand that the treaty undertakes to define what character of hostility operates to forfeit the rights of an entire tribe. And, sir, I understand the article of the treaty which has been referred to by gentlemen who are in favor of this resolution simply provides what tribal hostility may operate to destroy the rights of the Indians under the treaty, and gives the President of the United States the right to declare the treaty void and thenceforth of no force.

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. KEIFER. In one moment. Now gentlemen propose that a commission shall go out, appointed by the President of the United States, who may consult with the women and the boys and the cowards and the skulkers that are about there, and carry away that entire reservation, the United States at the same time standing up and claiming that it is enforcing treaty rights. If the President of the United States thinks and believes that the Ute Indians have forfeited their rights under this treaty let him so declare. Let gentlemen act boldly about this matter, and not undertake to deal with a certain class of persons who shall speak for the whole tribe.

Mr. SCALES. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, I think it is very evident that we cannot get to a vote this evening. With the permission, therefore, of the gentleman, I will move that the committee rise. He will have the floor when the House again goes into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FRYE. Before the gentleman stops I will make a suggestion which will perhaps save all difficulty about this matter. I suggest that the Ute Indians be stricken out from the resolution, and that the Fusionist tribes of Maine be inserted in their place. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. The other day my distinguished friend from Maine was disposed to be facetious about Ohio. But his conscience has pricked him, and he now comes and attacks his own State. I am willing to agree to the course suggested by the gentleman from North Carolina, reserving my right to the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like the gentleman to answer one question.

Mr. KEIFER. I will when I again take the floor and have an opportunity of knowing more about it.

Mr. CONGER. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. SCALES. I move, then, that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the joint resolution (S. R. No. 51) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservations in Colorado and their removal and settlement elsewhere, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CORRECTION IN SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION ACT.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to correct an error in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the clause in the first section of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1879, which makes an appropriation "for payment of retained percentages on contracts made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, for paving roadways in Capitol grounds, $2,217.94," is hereby so amended as to read "for payment of retained percentages on contracts made during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1876, for paving roadways in Capitol grounds, $2,217.94."

Mr. BLOUNT. I will simply state that this is to correct an error in the sundry civil bill, which grew out of an error, perhaps typographical, in the Book of Estimates. It is a unanimous report. If further explanation be desired, I will have read the communications from the Department on the subject. If not, I will have them printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The following are the communications from the Treasury Department:

ARCHITECT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., November 26, 1879.

SIR: I beg leave to call the attention of your honorable committee to a clerical error made in the following paragraph of the sundry civil appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1879:

"For payment of retained percentages on contracts made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, for paving roadways in Capitol grounds, $2,217.94."

The amount thus appropriated is not available, as the language of the act should have been for payment of retained percentages on contracts made during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1876.

The contracts for which this percentage was intended were all made in September, 1876, and provided that the retained percentages should be paid three years after date of contract.

I respectfully ask that an amended act be passed relating to this matter, so that the money may be available for the purpose intended.

I am, very respectfully,

EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

ARCHITECT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., November 5, 1879.

SIR: The reserved percentages for work done on paving roadways during the year 1876 are now nearly due and payable. In examining the appropriation for sundry civil expenses, approved March 3, 1879, I find that in the paragraph relating to these reservations a clerical error has been made, namely: for retained percentages on contracts made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, instead of fiscal year beginning July 1, 1876.

As this is a clerical error, and as there were no contracts made before for roadways, I hope that by referring this matter to the Comptroller permission may be given to use this money without getting an amendatory act of Congress for this purpose.

Very respectfully,

EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol.

R. JOSEPH, Esq.,
Disbursing Agent for the Office of the Architect United States Capitol.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 8, 1879.

SIR: Acknowledgment is made of your reference to this office of a letter of Hon. Edward Clark, Architect of the Capitol, dated the 5th instant.

The language of the clause in the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1879, referred to in that letter, is not ambiguous, and the words "ending June 30, 1876," cannot be construed to mean "ending June 30, 1877."

Amendatory legislation will be required.

Yours, respectfully,

A. G. PORTER, Comptroller.

R. JOSEPH, Esq.,
Disbursing Clerk for the Office of the Architect of the United States Capitol, Interior Department.

CAROLINE V. SAYRE.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee of Accounts, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the Sergeant-at-Arms thereof a sum sufficient to pay the proper funeral and expenses of last sickness of Philemon D. Sayre, late an employé of this House: Provided, Said sum shall not exceed $500, to be approved by the Committee of Accounts; and there shall be paid out of the same fund, subject to the same approval, three months' pay to Mrs. Caroline V. Sayre, mother of deceased.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would inquire whether it has been customary to pay accounts of this kind? I have never known it.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I would say in regard to the inquiry of the gentleman that I have consulted with persons in reference to this matter, and am informed that for the last twenty years it has been customary to pay expenses of this kind. Last session we passed a resolution of a similar character in reference to Mr. Douglas, the colored man who had charge of the water-closet. We also passed another resolution in reference to Mr. Lennox, one of the employés of this House. If gentlemen desire it, I will have them read.

Many MEMBERS. That is not necessary.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let them be printed in the RECORD for the information of the House.

There was no objection.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the Sergeant-at-Arms thereof a sum sufficient to pay the proper funeral and expenses of last sickness of Robert W. Lennox, late an employé of this House: Provided, Said sum shall not exceed $500, to be approved by the Committee of Accounts; and there shall be paid out of the said fund, subject to the same approval, three months' pay to Mrs. James Lennox, mother of said deceased.

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Nancy Douglas, widow of H. Douglas, late an employé of this House, a sum equal to his pay for three months, and the proper funeral expenses.

The resolution reported by Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, was then adopted.

M. M. HERR.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, also, from the Committee of Accounts, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) for the relief of M. M. Herr; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to M. M. Herr the sum of $605 for services as assistant sergeant-at-arms to the House of Representatives during the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I will state that this joint resolution is necessary in order that the money may be obtained from the Treasury. The House has already passed a simple resolution of the House, but the Comptroller of the Treasury refuses to audit the account. This joint resolution is for the purpose of putting the matter in the proper shape to secure payment.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL PAGE FOR DOORKEEPER.

Mr. WEAVER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

No. 3057) granting the passage through the mails at pound rates of all publications issued in print and at regular intervals by health boards and health officers throughout the country; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF ALLEGHENY RIVER.

Mr. WHITE. I ask consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House at as early a day as practicable the manner, in detail, of the expenditure of the money appropriated by the Forty-fifth Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Allegheny River in the State of Pennsylvania, and also the amount of money which may be necessary to complete the improvements already commenced, and also the amount which may be necessary to improve the navigation of said river from Olean, in the State of New York, to the headwaters of the Ohio River at Pittsburgh.

Mr. DUNNELL. That resolution ought to go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WHITE. I beg the gentleman not to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to its present consideration, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

Mr. MCMILLIN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. COX. I desire to offer a resolution for the convenience of members.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion.

CENSUS.

Mr. COX submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the census law be printed for the use of the members of the House, accompanied with a statement of the division of supervisor districts made by the Superintendent of the Census.

Mr. DUNNELL. The number ought to be 2,000.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that. Members want it.

Mr. KEIFER. It should not be less than 2,000.

Mr. COX. I will modify the resolution so as to make the number 2,000.

The resolution, as modified, was then adopted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DWIGHT asked leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of James Byers, George W. Grigg, and John Nolan; which request was referred to the Committee of Claims, there having been an adverse report in the Forty-third Congress.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GOVERNMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
